Every musician, every singer, every dancer and actor, whether performing solo or ensemble, is to be individually thanked. Thanked for dreaming of moments when they can stand before you to entertain, enlighten, and amuse. Thanked for their time sacrificed to hone their skills. Thanked for seeking the arts as their form of expression.

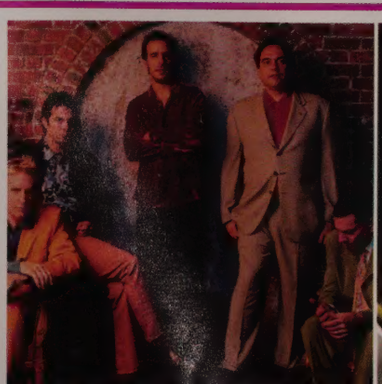

We're all better for their efforts. James V. Zizzi understands labors of love, and his homes stand before you as testament. Which is why James V. Zizzi Contracting is a proud supporter of the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center.

How to Succeed in the Hamptons

Whether you are a business or not-for-profit, success requires strategic thinking and communication.

The one company in the Hamptons more experienced than any other in providing strategic thinking and communications is Mullen & McCaffrey Communications.

We help our business and not-for-profit clients develop realistic strategic plans and persuasive communications in the areas of:

Business Development and Marketing
We can help you define and refine your goals and provide comprehensive, integrated plans for achieving them. We not only provide plans, we roll up our sleeves and help implement them.

Advertising and Direct Mail
We conceive, write, design and produce direct mail, print and broadcast advertising that sells. While our direct mail and advertising have won national and international awards, we prefer to judge our performance by results.

Not-for-Profit Development and Fundraising
We have helped build fundraising programs, including special events, direct mail, and new donor acquisition for many of the Hamptons' most successful not-for-profits. We have compiled one of the most prestigious fundraising lists available in the Hamptons.

Public and Government Relations
With more than 20 years of consulting for business, not-for-profit, civic, and political clients in the Hamptons, we can offer you unparalleled access to the area's leaders, decision makers, and elected officials. We are also experienced crisis managers.

Our Offer

Our first consultation is FREE.

Call (631) 324-4265 for an appointment.

While we are based in East Hampton, we have served clients in the tri-state area and across the country.

AMBASSADOR Value Pack Ticket Books Are Now Available!

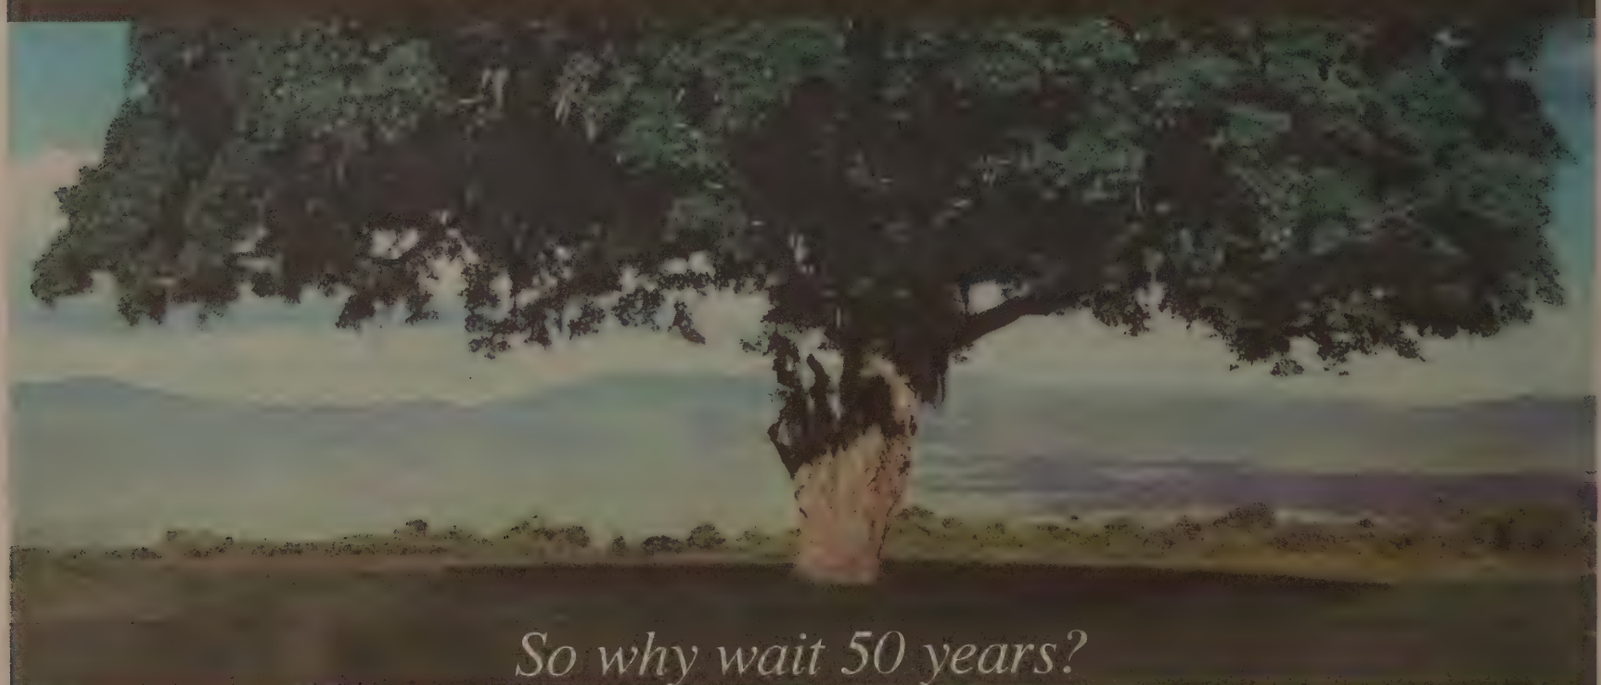

Hampton Jitney is open 24 hours a day for information & reservations through our online website reservation and Value Pack order system. Make your travel reservations quickly and accurately, then place a secure order for your Value Pack Ticket Book.

Show tour reservations are accepted only with payment at the time of booking: credit card by phone, cash or check at HJ reservation desk in the Omni lobby. Credit card sales are processed at the time of the reservation. Cancellations will be accepted on a conditional basis – we will attempt to resell the seats, but do not guarantee to do so; if not resold, the customer is still obligated to pay for the non-sold/non-cancelable parts of the package. Any change, refund or cancellation will incur a $15 per person service charge.

EQUAL HOUSING LENDER

The most beautiful homes in Manhattan, The Hamptons, and Palm Beach have one thing in common. Us.

Ellen Bitton, President

And because we do one thing, and one thing only, we do it very well. In fact, when it comes to securing mortgages, people say we're the best. We'll get you the perfect mortgage. You may only need us once or twice in a lifetime. But when you do, we'll be there. Call us. You'll see. There's a lot more to mortgages than just numbers.

ASK GAEL

I'm in the Hamptons and need a reality check.

Crank down a few decibels with lunch at The Fish Farm. Get Marie Valenti to dish up her marvelous, peppery swordfish chili (a pint is perfect for two) and a couple of honest lobster rolls, barely mayo'd and sporting a big chunk of tail meat on top. Coleslaw is a must. Potato puree and just a dab of cream thicken the New England clam chowder and the lobster bisque. Marie cooks salmon farmed or wild, served with local corn. A crab cake on a bun is skinny but full of crabmeat. Husband Bob does the Key-lime tart. Thirty years ago, the Valentis came here to raise pan-size striped bass. "But no one was eating whole fish back then," she says. They switched to stocking local lobsters and fish, then started cooking eight years ago. Pick up to go, or settle at an umbrella'd picnic table overlooking the water. BYOB if you wish. You'll forget you ever heard of the Hamptons. Noon to 7:30.

Vertigo

Wall Street Executive Climbs Cell Phone Tower in Water Mill

By Dan Rattiner

A man who climbed a tall cell tower pole in Water Mill behind the LIPA building was rescued by police and fire units four hours after he went up. He had apparently gone up there to readjust a cell phone transmitter, but then had suffered a case of vertigo and had been unable to come down. He was up at the top of the tower from approximately 5 a.m. on Saturday morning until 9 a.m. the same day when a passing motorist on the Montauk Highway saw him up there and called 911.

Police from Southampton and East Hampton arrived at the scene shortly thereafter, followed by fire units from the nearby Southampton firehouse on Hampton Road, the Otter Hose firehouse in Sag Harbor and the Bridgehampton Firehouse. The Water Mill Rescue Ambulance was also dispatched. Also arriving was the 106th Air Rescue Unit from Westhampton, which consisted of two helicopters and six pararescuemen that proceeded to circle the tower. Half an hour later, after the tallest fire ladder on the East End was extended, a Water Mill fireman climbed up rung by rung above that and rescued the man from his ninety-five foot perch.

The man originally identified himself as Paddy O'Malley and said he was an employee of KeySpan, which shares the office building in front with LIPA. He said he had been assigned to make an adjustment and had gotten cold feet once he had gotten up there. But police officials were suspicious of that when KeySpan officials, arriving on what is normally a day off, said they could not recall an employee by the name of Paddy O'Malley. It was also observed he was not wearing a KeySpan service person's uniform, nor did he have on the regulation hard hat. He also didn't look like a worker. He was balding, about sixty, and was wearing pajamas.

> And when further phone calls to his cell phone also went unanswered, she feared the worst.

Soon, he confessed to being David J. L. Weinberg, 59, of Manhattan, a Vice President of the Wall Street investment banking firm of Waldrum, Koch and Silverstein. He said he had climbed the tower because the cell phone reception at his summerhome at 383 Sandpiper Court in Sagaponack had deteriorated. He believed that someone had moved one of the transmitters on the tower causing that to happen and if he were able to redirect it he could improve his service. It was very important to him that the service be improved. He had important calls that he had to make. And so he had called the phone company but had had no response.

Shortly after the confession, police were able to link up Mr. Weinberg's story with a missing persons report filed about an hour earlier. A Mrs. Jennifer Weinberg of 383 Sandpiper Court had frantically called the Southampton Police at 8:12 a.m. to report that her husband had gone out at 5 a.m. reportedly to "watch the sunrise," and when he hadn't returned for breakfast at seven, she became frantic. She tried reaching him on his cell phone — she had called from the house phone — but there was no answer. And when further phone calls to his cell phone also went unanswered, she feared the worst. She finally called the police at 8:12 to say it was not like him to go out and not return and that he always called and she was worried about him. The police then asked her if she would like to file a missing person's report and she said yes and the police said they would be on the lookout for him and asked for a description of his car, which Mrs. Weinberg said was a silver grey 2005 Mercedes Benz CE350 Sedan. They also dispatched an officer to the home to get the missing persons report in writing, which Mrs. Weinberg provided. It was also noted, in a separate police memo, that the Weinbergs have a large, colorful tropical bird that flies loose around the house and which should be caged. Mrs. Weinberg said she would get such a cage that day, but right then it was more important that her husband was found.

Mr. Weinberg's Mercedes was found at the scene. He was taken by ambulance to Southampton Hospital where he was admitted for observation, treated for exposure and sunburn, and then in the afternoon released.

Police have charged Mr. Weinberg with making a false statement to police officers, endangering others, trespassing, attempted damage to corporate property and generally being a big pain in the ass.

His cell phone was found in his car. •

Which is the Biggest? Rennert? Biltmore? Hearst Castle?

By Dan Rattiner

Industrialist Ira Rennert has spent six years building a huge palace on the beach in Sagaponack. It was completed last year and he moved into it without much fanfare. And since that time not much has been heard about it. He's living in it quietly with his family, and most people feel comfortable about that. A man's home is his castle, after all.

During the building process, when the dirt was flying, this was certainly not the case. This was to be a home with 29 bedrooms and 29 baths, with 110,000 square feet of floor space, with a gate house, a guest house, a pool house, a play house, a beach house, a power house, a greenhouse and so forth, all on 63 acres of former oceanfront farmland. How could it be a private home? It would be a hotel. A religious retreat. It would ruin the area. Rennert had all the farm soil simply stripped off the property and carted away. He then brought in his own soil. People said they would move away. People said it would completely transform the small farm town of Sagaponack. People said this would be, and now is, the largest home in America.

Well, it turns out it is a home, and Sagaponack was being transformed with or without Mr. Rennert. As for it being the largest private home in America, the town dealt with this by passing a law saying that in the future, you could not build a home larger than 20,000 square feet. Something of this scale would not happen again.

One day not long ago, however, I boarded a plane at LaGuardia Airport to go look at a private home which some people have told me is even larger than Rennert's. Rennert is Number Two, they said. I said I didn't believe it. And so I went to see for myself.

For awhile, I thought that this might be what the future looks like when Mr. Rennert and his family have gone.

Over the weekend, in Asheville, North Carolina, I saw a private home that makes the Rennert mansion look like an outhouse. Without considering Rennert's out buildings, Rennert's main house, which is a two-story affair designed to look like an Italian Palazzo, is 66,000 square feet. How about a home four times that size?

My significant other and I flew to Charlotte, rented a car, and headed out Route 26 toward Asheville, which is not far from the border with Tennessee. There, up in the mountains, we arrived at the Biltmore Estate. It is not on some former 63-acre farm. It is on a property of 14,000 acres, consisting of rolling hills, lakes, streams and waterfalls and pastures. It also includes a working farm.

George Vanderbilt, the son of a Manhattan industrialist who had made a fortune in the railroad and shipping business in the 1880s worth $90 billion in today's money, spent the same six years to build his vacation home that Rennert did. And he wound up not with a 66,000 square foot Italian Palazzo, but with a 180,000 square foot turreted castle the size of one in England. It has nearly 100 bedrooms, and I think they said 85 baths. And it is still in the family, though it is no longer used as a private home. It is a tourist attraction and people walk through it from 9 in the morning until 5:30 in the afternoon to see this amazing wonder, which is still filled with the original ancient European tapestries, the furniture, sculptures and paintings brought together by Mr. Vanderbilt for the enjoyment of himself, his wife, his daughter and all their frequent guests.

"No public monies are spent to support this home," a guide told us. Well, no monies needed to be spent for that purpose. It was largely because of the Vanderbilts and other industrialists that President Teddy Roosevelt, about ten years after Biltmore was completed, instituted the Income Tax. (Incidentally, there are Hearsts who live in the Hamptons who run a fundraiser among their rich friends to support the Hearst Castle in California. No public funding for the Hearsts, either. Rennert, by the way, has made his money in the mining business. And he is rich enough, but not that rich, though he, too, is free of public funding.)

For awhile as we walked through this mansion, I thought that this might be what the future looks like when Mr. Rennert and his family have gone. But, on second thought, I thought not. The Biltmore Mansion is of national importance.

It took almost three hours to tour the Biltmore Mansion, and even then I think we had walked through only about half of all the rooms. In a large hall in the basement, among many other heirlooms, there is a scale model of this mansion. It sits on a table, seven feet long and four feet high, under glass. It's made of wood and it was completed the year before construction started. In front of the model is a card on which is a quote from a New York City daily at the time, the New York Sun. "A horse pulling a cart came downtown to the offices of this newspaper," the quote says, "bearing what architect Richard Morris Hunt says is a scale model of a summer home about to be built for George Vanderbilt in North Carolina. That proved to be the case."

William Randolph Hearst had recently purchased the New York Sun. The Vanderbilt mansion would dwarf the Hearst mansion. Take THAT Hearst.

There were no airplanes, obviously, in 1895. To get there, George and Edith Vanderbilt and their daughter would go from their Fifth Avenue home to Penn Station in Manhattan just before dinner time (remember they owned railroads), get aboard their private railroad car and, while whizzing through New Jersey, be served dinner in the dining car. They would then retire for the night and when they woke up in the morning they would have a leisurely breakfast watching the hills and woods of northern North Carolina pass, and then around 10 a.m. disembark at their private railroad station at "Biltmore Village," a cluster of buildings they had built at the entrance gate of their property. Frederick Law Olmstead, the same man who had designed Central Park, by the way, had landscaped the property.

My significant other and I stayed on the property, on top of a hill about a mile away on which had been built a very elegant 140-room hotel called the Inn at the Biltmore. We could look out our seventh floor window and, as far as the eye could see, see nothing but woods and trees. At night, there wasn't even a single light. We were at the Vanderbilts'.

A few highlights from our trip. We saw old films of the staff of the estate, lining the entry road, cheering and throwing flowers, as George and Edith arrived as royalty might to take up residence for one of their long weekends. (That has not yet happened at Rennert's.)

On the property, we drove our rented car, a Chrysler convertible with the top down, at 30 miles an hour along the narrow winding roads (as a car like that was meant to be driven), and we visited the Biltmore stables where my significant other went for a trail ride. We also drove to the Biltmore farm, where we visited with chickens, goats, horses and sheep that still provide much of the food for the estate's guests. (Won't find that at Rennert's.)

We walked through all the gardens that surround the palace. We walked through English garden[illegible]talian gardens, Azalea Gardens, a walled [illegible]den, a shrub garden and if there were any other kind of garden, that one too because the Vanderbilts had everything.

We ate at the Bistro restaurant in the Biltmore Winery (recently built), we ate in the hotel we were staying in, ate by a roaring fire with these stunning views as I described above, and we had lunch with a friend we know from Asheville, author Marshall duBrughle, at a cafe on the property called Deer Park. (Marshall had a "local resident" card that afforded him a discount.)

And we became curious about some sort of large event going on involving horses in a field. There were several hundred of them, with all their horse trailers, gear, grooms, owners and riders. There were also tents assembled where

The Real Story About Why Deep Impact Hit the Comet

By Dan Rattiner

So we sent off a rocket ship called Deep Impact last April that, two and a half months later, slammed into a comet half the size of Manhattan 85 million miles away just so we could see what kind of hole it would make in it. If the hole was deep, it was because the comet probably was made of solid ice. If the hole was shallow it probably was made mostly of rocks.

At 2 o'clock Sunday morning, way after bedtime out at the Jet Propulsion Lab in Los Angeles, the scientists watched on a TV monitor as the rocket hit —right on target — and everybody jumped up, cheered and danced around giving each other high fives. Wow. Wasn't that something.

Right. Let me tell you something. Dan's Papers has learned that this was not about whether or not the rocket would make a little hole or a big hole. It was about something far more important than that. Why do you think they called the rocket "Deep Impact?" In the movie "Deep Impact" the idea was to fire off a rocket, actually several rockets, at an incoming comet to see if it could be knocked off course before it could hit Earth. It couldn't. The comet came in anyway, flew over Paris and splashed down in the North Atlantic about 200 miles south of eastern Long Island. The huge tidal wave that it caused roared over the beaches of the Hamptons — a part of the film where the tidal wave comes in was actually filmed on the beach in Amagansett — and it roared over the Verrazanno Bridge and the Statue of Liberty and knocked down practically all the tall buildings in Manhattan. Everybody died. On the whole planet everybody died.

Now I do not pretend to understand how a small comet half the size of Manhattan, which was also the size of the one in the movie, could cause such devastation, but apparently it can. It is believed that a comet about that size hit the Yucatan Peninsula several million years ago and wiped out the dinosaurs. Another

LEVY VETOES PLAN FOR OBSERVATORY IN MONTAUK

By Dan Rattiner

One of the best suggestions to come along for Montauk in recent times is the plan to put a telescope and observatory at Third House. Third House is one of the more valuable historical holdings in the community. It was built in the 1700s out toward Montauk Point as a home for the cowboys who managed the livestock herds for the East Hampton residents during the summertime. It was also used as an inn for whoever came out there. After the Spanish-American War ended in 1898, it served as the headquarters for the 32,000-man American army that returned from Cuba, living in tents for the summer in Montauk to regroup before mustering out of the service and returning home. Both General Schaftner and Colonel Theodore Roosevelt lived in Third House during that time.

In the 1920s, Third House became the centerpiece for a dude and cattle ranch, built on the 4,000 acres of hills and grassland immediately surrounding it. It was called Deep Hollow Ranch and was conceived by advertising genius Marion Harper for his wife, Virginia, a horsewoman, who ran it. Its slogan was "the First Cattle Ranch in America" and it certainly was. A series of cottages formed a semi-circle behind the main house for guests.

Cattle and horses are still to be seen on the ranch today, but now it is owned by the Suffolk County Department of Parks, who have not done much with it and, in fact, have let the main house fall into disrepair. (It is scheduled for a restoration this fall.)

The suggestion to build an observatory at Third House came about a month ago by a man with deep roots in Montauk, Jay Schneiderman. Schneiderman grew up summering in Montauk. His parents ran the Breakers Cottages on the Old Montauk comet, much smaller, only about 100 yards across, crashed into northern Siberia a few hundred thousand years ago and it killed all the woolly mammoths and most everything else for five hundred miles around. That's what they say. And they have the bones to prove it.

It must have something to do with the speed at which it hits I think. Certainly its not it's size.

Out at the Jet Propulsion Lab, the scientists say that it is pure coincidence that they named their rocket "Deep Impact." They are, after all, just a bunch of scientists with their noses in books all the time and none of them had ever seen the movie "Deep Impact." There was a movie by that name?

They also deny that this rocket shot had any connection with all those comet tracking posts that have been set up during the last ten years, where we have people with telescopes on the lookout for any incoming comets that might head our way. I'm sure you remember when they set these up. It was in the news. And there have been various reports since they were set up about near misses.

Anyway, did the "Deep Impact" rocket do what it was supposed to do? Did it save the world? I'm not sure. Certainly, if it did save the world, that would explain all the scientists jumping around and high fiving each other at 2 o'clock in the morning. On the other hand, the scientists say that the smoke has to clear before they can be sure they have achieved a success. There is a lot of dust and smoke. Depending upon what the comet is made of, it will clear up in either a few days or a few weeks or a month or two. It will leave a trail of dust, and some particles the size of refrigerators and small houses twirling around behind slowly falling away. Only then will they really know what went down. Either it's a big mess. Or a neat thing with a hole in it.

So there you have it. Either you believe the official report, which is that they now know the comet is made of rocks. Or ice. Or you believe the Dan's Papers report, which we have gotten from a well positioned insider source whose name we will protect even if it mea that we have to go to jail, which that the earth is saved. Or not.

Personally, I hope the rocket save the world by knocking away comet. That would be good. The ins er source says that it did, but dur the next few days they have to ch over all the math. Maybe someth got added in instead of being s tracted. Maybe they forgot to ca the three. Or put something in wrong column.

The other thing, the source says to check and see that the vari refrigerators and small houses not get knocked off in such a way t they might trail along and hit us a way, but later, maybe in a few th sand years. They'd cause hav although not for us. But the species would s vive.

In any case, the source says, it's 99% su Which is why everybody was jumping arou

Cross your fingers. And remember, you r about this first in Dan's Papers.

As we go to press, we learn that Russ astrologer Marina Bai has filed a laws against the U. S. Space Agency, saying that rocket that punched the hole in the co "ruins the natural balance of forces in the u verse" and that this will "deform" her ho scopes. She wants $300 million for "moral s fering."

Van Hits Parked Cars in Water Mill. Half a Million in Damages

By David Lion Rattiner

Accidents that happen out here in the Hamptons where no one gets hurt or injured are a little bit different than the ones that happen just about anywhere else. Consider the auto accident two Wednesdays ago in Water Mill where five classic Rolls Royce vehicles were smashed up on good old 27 East. Yes, you read that right, five Rolls Royces.

The unknown driver of a 2004 Ford Van, who was probably coming out to the Hamptons for a visit, was cruising along Montauk Highway admiring the traffic filled with incredibly beautiful cars. Up ahead on the right was an auto repair shop with the cars all lined up out front. There were Ferraris, Porches, Mercedes, and of course the occasional Rolls Royce.

But then, with a snap, the van's axle broke in two. The driver struggled to maintain control but it was a lost cause. The van tipped, fell over onto its side, and then slid into the aptly named Chariots of Fire Auto Repair Shop, and one at a time, like bowling pins, crashed into five classic Rolls Royce cars along with a classic Mercedes Benz.

One has to wonder how much money all of this damage is going to cost. Not only how much money it is going to cost, but who is going to pay for it. Mr. Jim Robles, the owner of the Chariots of Fire repair shop, estimated that the damages on the classic Mercedes Benz, which happened to be his, is going to be beyond $70,000. It is unknown how much each Rolls Royce is going to cost, but surely those cars will cost just as much as the repairs on the Mercedes, if not more. Let's just say for argument's sake that each one has $80,000 worth of damage. This means that nearly half a million dollars in damages was caused by this one minor accident. Fortunately, nobody was injured. The driver and the passenger of the Ford were taken to the hospital with minor injuries.

However, there has been no news about how

ONE MAN'S SOLUTION FOR THE BULOVA BUILDING

By Leonardo Liguori

First, allow me to begin with a little background on myself; like most children I picked up a crayon and began drawing at an early age. Then unlike most kids, I picked up a camera and really haven't put it, or the drawing tools, down since.

In addition to photography and drawing, I've been on the stage, on the silver screen, produced, written and directed for film/video, won awards for my sand sculptures, had one of my photographs received by President Clinton, had another image hang in the NBA Hall of Fame, several of my images of the historical Patchogue Lace Mill are located in Albany. I created an independent film on and documented the demolition of the Lace Mill, I've produced videos for the medical field, I've shot professional fireworks all across North America, lectured on acting, photography and film making.

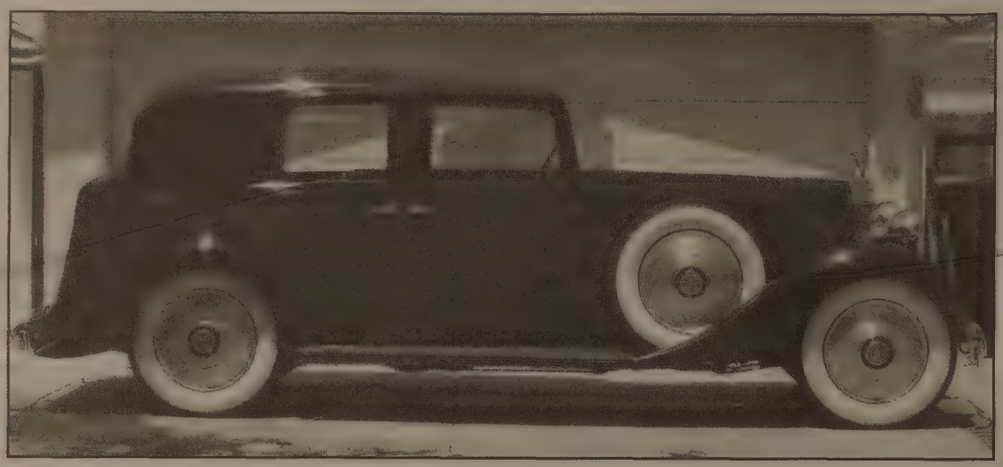

In the early 90s, after spending several years on the "Left" coast working in front and behind the "lens" I returned to Long Island. Not long after my return I turned my attention to a vacant commercial building located in East Patchogue. I had an idea to convert the building into an artist center. The plan was to turn the old offices into studios, galleries, an art supply store, and even living spaces.

My research on existing "artist centers" led me to Alexandria, Virginia, to a place known as The Torpedo Factory. In 1976 an artist approached the city and asked if they'd help her convert part of the building into workspaces for local artists. They did. And today, the waiting list for artists to get into the Torpedo Factor is several years long and it's become the area's largest indoor tourist attraction. I contacted them, explained what I wanted to do and was invited down for an "inside" tour. Armed with this newly acquired knowledge I ran back to the the repairs of these cars are going to be paid for. Perhaps the van's driver's insurance would pay for it. To get a better idea, I called my car insurance provider, Geico, to see what they would have to say about the accident. The claims department said, "You have property damage liability coverage only up to $50,000. That's pretty normal."

I was kind of surprised that this limit was so small.

"Okay, so you're telling me that if I crash into five parked Rolls Royces and one Mercedes Benz accidentally and cause half a million in damages then Geico will only pay $50,000?"

"Yes."

"Well, that kind of sucks."

"Yeah, I guess it does. But keep in mind the Rolls Royce guys probably have insurance that they can go to as well. They all probably have supplementary underinsured motorist insurance. This means that if someone crashes into their Rolls Royce and can't afford the damage caused, then his insurance company will take care of it."

"Well, that's awesome."

"Yeah, I guess it is."

"So your're saying that I shouldn't worry that much if I crash into five Rolls Royces and a Mercedes Benz?"

"Well……no. Your premium will go up. Maybe twenty dollars. And if their insurance doesn't cover the damage then you again would be responsible. Now that I think about it there might be a chance that those cars weren't insured because they were being restored and not on the road. If that is the case then the insurance wouldn't cover them."

"And then what?"

"Well, each one is a case by case type of thing, so I can't really tell you what would happen. But the responsibility would lie with you."

"I see. Is it possible to have insurance that costs the same per month but has a higher limit based on the fact that you live in an area where there are a lot of fancy cars?"

"No, you buy the insurance at the specific rates offered."

"Well, that's dumb, they should do that."

"I wouldn't know, sir."

I said goodbye and hung up.

The only other person or entity rather, that I could think of that will pay for the damage to these beautiful cars was Ford itself. After all, an axle shouldn't just break while driving on the road. I tried calling Ford but just kept getting sent to a different person. I finally gave up.

Maybe a specific Hamptons insurance would solve this kind of a problem. Insurance companies could sell an insurance product that covers you up to an enormously high amount, but only for certain brands of vehicles. For example, you crash into a Honda, you won't be covered, but you crash into a Ferrari, you are covered. However, the one catch is that you have to have the accident in the Hamptons. If you crash while heading out to the Hamptons on the Expressway, that's a whole different package altogether. There is a business opportunity here.

Yesterday I parked next to a black Ferrari. Just breathing near it made me nervous.

Soleau Bay

New Village is Formed on the Barrier Reef at Shinnecock

By Christian McLean

The modern Shinnecock fishing industry was born out of one of Long Island's greatest natural disasters, The Hurricane of 1938. It is odd to say that anything positive came out of a storm that caused so much death and destruction, but at least one thing did; the Shinnecock Inlet. The inlet, which appeared overnight, was formed when the ocean ripped through the barrier beach where Hampton Bays and Southampton once met.

As the years progressed and the tides receded, shifting the sandbars of the Shinnecock Bay to their current place, locals began to forget about the destruction and focused on the fact that this inlet now gave boats almost instant access to the ocean. Soon the commercial fishing industry in Hampton Bays began.

The wharfs have changed hands over the years and with every generation they seem to change shape as well. Originally intended as safe harbors and quick access, the wharfs were strictly utilitarian in purpose.

Last weekend I caught up with Bob Soleau owner of Soleau's Wharf at the eastern end of Hampton Bays' famed Dune Road. We sat in his newly finished restaurant, Top of the Wharf, and talked about the land's history.

In 1956, Captain Norm Stiansen started housing boats at the location. He didn't build a wharf immediately. Instead he established a series of stick docks on the marshy waters. Most of the boats that began to use the docks were originally from Islip Bay, which took much longer to reach the ocean than Shinnecock. By the time the fisherman got from Islip to the ocean, fisherman from Shinnecock were already preparing to drop their nets in the ocean waters. That accessibility to the sea is what has sustained the land for so long.

Captain Norm watched as more boats continued to appear looking for safe harbor. And he began to build the wharf to what it is today. Others also caught on and soon he had competition. Pell's and Cornisi's docks followed suit and quickly the area became known as one of the largest commercial fishing ports in New York, second only to Montauk.

In the late seventies, Bob Soleau was run-

A BAD LOCATION FOR A PROPOSED NEW MARINA

By David Lion Rattiner

It is always a battle when you want to build a business here that is going to detrimentally affect the environment. The reason for this is because there are often too many business people that are willing to destroy natural areas for commerce. The other reason is that the natural beauty of our area is the very reason why our economy has been able to thrive for so long. And so, the proposed construction of a marina in East Quogue at Dockers Restaurant that could potentially destroy a remote and beautiful environmental area is being looked at through a skeptical lens.

The proposed marina would house 54 boats in a remote area and negatively affect the environment. The basic idea is that Dockers owner Larry Hoffman wants a marina that he can add to his café business. The only problem is that a marina in the area he wants to build it on, is, some say, too rich in life that would be impacted dramatically by such a project.

The Dockers site where the marina is proposed is in a low traffic area. It is one thing to build something like this in an area that is already bumping with people and boats, but it is another, in this day and age, at least here, to expand something like that in an area that is largely undeveloped. Dockers Marina would be built on a largely undeveloped stretch of tidal marshes along the southern shoreline of Tiana Bay.

The Dockers property was purchased in 1990 and has enjoyed steady growth since its purchase. However, Peconic Baykeeper Kevin McAllister believes this project should not happen. There would simply be too much damage to the environment. Sewage discharges, oil ning commercial fishing boats out of New Jersey and came upon the Shinnecock Inlet in the latter part of that decade. By 1982 he had purchased Captain Norm's Dock and Marina and in the following years bought both Pell's and Cornisi's land as well. On the newly purchased property there were already established restaurants and bars. One which is said to have smelled more like fish than the actual ships docked outside.

The Hamptons were obviously growing and the desire for upscale waterfront dining became apparent. Bob refitted his restaurant with a new look and a new name, Sunwater's Grill. With a commercial fishing fleet to provide daily specials, literally right off the boat, it became apparent that Soleau was onto something. A viable fishing wharf and a restaurant with bay and ocean views seemed like a win-win, but increasing fishing legislation began to take its toll on the wharf. Although the restaurant was doing well, the wharf, which packs and ships its fish to the Fulton Fish Market, had taken a serious hit. In the 90s it was estimated that Soleau's Wharf was hauling in somewhere between seven to eight million pounds of fish a year, but once regulations were put in place, the annual haul dropped to between five and seven million pounds. To compound the problem, the real estate market began to boom, drawing carpenters, who had for years crewed fishing boats in the winter, away from the ships and kept them on construction sites building high-end homes year round.

Staffing boats became increasing difficult, and along with the cut in fish intake, many captains decided that they could make their money elsewhere, without dealing with the huge overhead and harsh seas.

Bob, who not only owns the wharf and the fish packing plant, also runs two boats (at one point five) with his son, sought to develop a way to supplement the wharf, bolster the economy and bring attention to the wharf as a part of local importance. This past year construction began on a large building which will house several storefronts and the Top of the Wharf restaurant. The concept is not exactly new to the East End, with Gosman's Dock, in Montauk, leading the way.

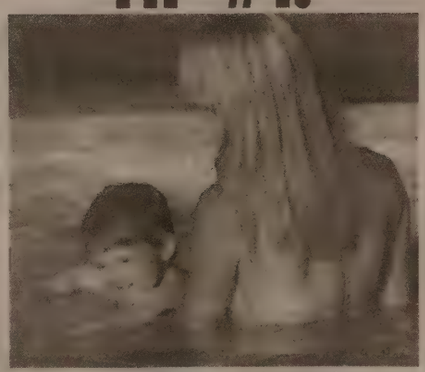

With Oakland's Restaurant directly next door, and Sunwater's Grill firmly established, this new restaurant had to be different. With the heavily trafficked Ponqugue Beach about a mile down the coast, he decided to keep the place beachy, with light fare like fried shrimp, hot dogs, and of course, drinks. The vistas from the bar area are stunning, 270 degrees of water (bay, inlet, and ocean). The lofty deck is airy and welcoming to flip flops and swim trunks. Below the restaurant will be a deli, a seafood market, a clothing store, and a gallery selling art and nautical antiques. Pretty much a one-stop shopping center for any beachgoer.

But with all this expansion and development, one has to wonder what will happen if the one thing that is responsible for creating this important harbor and fishing industry returns and once again carves up the little stretch of gold as it did in 1938? What if there is another hurricane? Surely insurance will cover much of the destruction of the buildings and docks, but what happens if the ocean meets the bay again, shoaling sand, and filling the ports with unimaginable amounts of sand? We'd lose the second largest fishing port in New York, a viable ocean business district and an irreplaceable piece of Hamptons history.

In other maritime news, across the Shinnecock Bay, just south of Montauk Highway, there are plans in the works to build The Shinnecock Canal Maritime Heritage Center, an 8,500 square foot facility dedicated to chronicling the history of local fishing and boating through exhibits and classes. The actual site is on Town-owned land overlooking the Shinnecock Canal, which would be leased to the Center. Although the plans have not been finished, architectural sketches and initial ideas include a 60-foot replica of the Shinnecock Lighthouse, which was destroyed in 1948. But the Board of Directors is steering clear of the word "museum" in an attempt to create a more dynamic place for learning.

Just last month, the Town of Southampton pledged a matching grant of a million dollars. Currently the Center has raised $100,000, but now that they are officially a non-profit organization, they can begin searching for state and federal grants and aid, which they hope will raise their purse closer to the million-dollar mark. It is going to be a long journey, but there now seems to be a light (or lighthouse) at the end of the tunnel.

The Naked Man in the Fog With a Bag Over His Head

by Joan Zandell

There is something deeply satisfying about fog. Stories in which enormous hounds bay on misty moors, where heroines are caught dramatically off-guard by a dashing rider on a black steed who appears abruptly from a densely vaporous cloud, are among the Western world's favorite tales. What would life be without the murky mystery novel, the dimly lit psychological thriller or the hazy scary movie?

What can happen when the imagination ceases to differentiate between a story and reality is, however, another matter. This past Tuesday, out on the ocean beach in front of the Maidstone Club, while the Hamptons experienced a lushly foggy morning that eventually would dissolve into a gloriously sunny afternoon, John Jairo Giraldo, a thirty-year-old Colombian housepainter interpreted that morning as another opportunity to play out a recurring fantasy.

Three components were necessary. The first was the dense fog in which he could hide and from which he would emerge. The second was he had to be naked except for a black ski mask or some form of face covering. And the third was the humiliation and degradation of an unsuspecting but arbitrary white female who would be attacked from behind, her face slammed repeatedly into the sand as she struggled for breath, while her attacker attempted but invariably failed to rape her.

In this instance, the victim was a sixty-one year-old woman. To her credit, the woman not only fought Mr. Giraldo but also screamed. As a result, the assault was observed by a young employee who went to her defense. Realizing that he might be caught, Mr. Giraldo fled back into the fog from which came, threw his mask into the dunes, and disappeared.

> Entering the visitors section of the Suffolk County Jail in Riverhead, I was asked for my driver's license, and told to remove my watch and headscarf.

For the next two hours, as helicopters circled the area, dogs tracked his scent, teams of police cars shut down certain streets and police officers went door to door, Mr. Giraldo dressed and went to work at a nearby construction site. Little did he know that in very short order, the police would appear, and he would be brought in for questioning.

Detective Sergeant Margaret Dunn of The East Hampton Village Police described Mr. Giraldo as "a person of interest" that four local police departments had been watching for some time. According to Detective Sergeant Randy Hintze of the Southampton Town Police, on June 8, 2005, there had been a similar attempted rape in the Mecox area, also with mask and fog. May 12, 2004, another foggy day, a twenty-eight-year-old woman was walking on the stretch of beach between Old Town Road Beach and Wyandanch Beach in Southampton when she spotted a man heading west. The woman thought the man was a jogger. Mr. Giraldo, again naked except for a ski mask, jumped her from behind and repeatedly smashed her face in the sand, while attempting but failing to rape her. According to Detective Sergeant Herman Lamison of Southampton Village, Mr. Giraldo is a prime suspect in six other cases dating back to 2002. His form of attack is a "crime of opportunity," says Lamison, who believes that his victims were simply at the wrong place at the wrong time.

In an uncharacteristic break from the usual emerging from the fog routine, on May 6, 2005, at 8:40 p.m., Mr. Giraldo allegedly appeared totally naked on Main Street in Bridgehampton, exposing himself to an office worker through the window while he masturbated. A similar incident had been reported in Quogue.

Something that had baffled the police for some time, making Mr. Giraldo difficult to catch, was that he had no set routine. After awhile however, it became clear that Mr. Giraldo coordinated his attacks with his work routine. He attacked in whatever neighborhood he happened to be working. That is why on the morning of the attack, the police knew where to find him. Knowing which company he worked for in Hampton Bays, they went to the work site. Once he was brought in for questioning, he made a full confession.

Crimes of this nature are unsettling and require an explanation. What makes a person lose all sense of propriety, making him act out in such a way? On Friday evening at 7 p.m., at the very start of the Fourth of July holiday weekend, I attempted to find out. I made an appointment to speak with John Giraldo. Entering the visitors section of the Suffolk County Jail in Riverhead, I was asked for my driver's license, told to remove my watch and headscarf and place it in locker number 25 along with my car keys. After walking through the metal detectors three times and putting my flip-flops on the conveyer belt through the X-Ray machine, I was allowed to enter the high security facility and sit at seat number 42.

There were many other women who had entered with me. They were there to visit their husbands and boyfriends. In the visiting room into which I was led, the glass separation is low enough to reach over and have physical contact. While I waited for Mr. Giraldo to be brought from his cell, all around me couples kissed and groped one another. The guards stood and watched. I wondered whether this was the closest thing to a conjugal visit these couples would get.

I waited quietly, trying not to stare. All the prisoners wore identical yellow jumpsuits. I kept my eye on the door. Finally Mr. Giraldo appeared. I recognized him from the photos I had seen. He walked towards me slowly, and gently sat down across from me. He seemed perplexed by my presence. I explained I was a writer for Dan's Papers. I had come to ask him why he had done the things he had. He said he did not speak English.

I said, "Why?" He looked away.

"Por que?" I said.

"I don't know," he said.

I noticed that he was not wearing handcuffs, but he kept his hands together at the wrists. I kept looking at his hands folded on the ledge between us. They were small. He was smaller than he had appeared in his photographs. I envisioned those small hands repeatedly slamming a woman's face into the sand. When I looked up, he was gazing at me, his eyes filled with tears. Then he cocked his head to one side, and making small circles with his left index finger, pointed at his brain and said, "Psychological problems."

The action seemed to say it all. Since I do not speak Spanish well, additional conversation appeared futile. I thanked him for his willingness to talk to me, got up and left. The metal gate crashed shut behind me with a tone of finality. I turned back to look at John Giraldo sitting alone at station 42, his hands still folded, his head turned downward. And I felt an overwhelming sadness for what I saw as a terrible turn in his life and the lives of his victims.

Like many other Colombians who have settled in the Southampton area, John Jaira Giraldo came to the United States to make money to support his family back home. The police say that his immigration status is unclear. According to the prison guards at the Suffolk County Jail, he does not have a social security number.

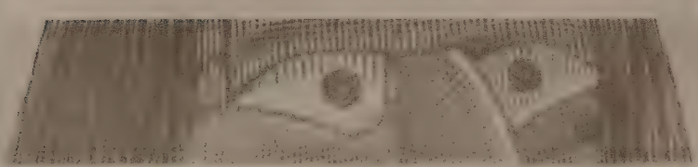

Although Dr. Daniel S. Becker of the Neuropsychiatric Clinic in Southampton and Amagansett did not examine Mr. Giraldo and so could not render a definitive, individual diagnosis, he was willing to discuss the general fetishistic characteristics under which Mr. Giraldo's behavior might fall; paraphilias.

According to Dr. Becker, people can have various paraphlias simultaneously which would account for Mr. Giraldo's appearance on Main Street in Bridgehampton fully naked one day, and emerging from the fog in a black ski mask the next. Dr. Becker said, "Generally, this type of behavior is engaged in far more frequently than is known or reported. When the perpetrator feels completely secure he might be inclined to confess to many more incidents than were recorded."

Another characteristic of paraphilia, said Dr. Becker, "is a constant appetite for the activity. He may feel shame, but the fantasy

Howard Schultz
...man of
...bucks

By Christine Edwards

For most people, there's nothing special bout pouring a cup of coffee. It's a simple, utine act, often performed while half-leep. But for Howard Schultz, a cup of cof-e is anything but ordinary. The chairman Starbucks, Schultz has virtually revolu-nized the way Americans look at coffee. spired by the espresso bars of Italy, he s transformed the Starbucks company m a simple business that in 1987 sold ly coffee beans and had just 17 locations a worldwide brand with dozens of prod-ts and over 9,000 locations in 35 coun-ies.

Schultz's story is an inspirational one, a ssic rags to riches tale. Born in 1952, he ew up in the Bayview Projects in ooklyn with his parents, brother and sis-r. His father worked a series of blue-collar bs and never experienced any sort of nancial security, and the thought of his ruggle to make ends meet has stayed with hultz his whole life. Ironically, coffee rely had a place in Schultz's life when he as a child. His mother mostly drank stant coffee, only occasionally brewing a t of canned coffee when company came er.

Schultz got his first job when he was 12, a per route. A stint at the local luncheon-te was next, and when he was 16, he got a job to travel to Seattle to about a company that makers in large quanti-s Starbucks Coffee, Tea, ust four stores. He went on a whirlwind tour of the company, visiting its flagship store and headquarters, and tasting coffee better than anything he had ever had before. He fell in love right there. He met the owners, Gordon Bowker and Jerry Baldwin, and spent a year trying to get them to hire him. In the spring of 1982, he met with the two and their silent partner, and told him his visions of expanding the company across the nation. He went home after dinner thinking everything had gone great, and was confident that he had been hired.

The next day, Baldwin called to tell him that his plans for the company were too risky, and that they had decided not to hire him. Dejected, Schultz went home to Sheri. But he decided not to give up, and called Baldwin back. After passionately arguing his case, he was finally hired. The decision marked just one important event that would take place that year. In July, Schultz and Kersch were married. In mid-August, his father was diagnosed with lung cancer. Schultz felt he could not leave, but both of his parents encouraged him to go, to create the life they had never had themselves.

Once in Seattle, Schultz quickly felt at home. At work, he sometimes felt like an outsider, used to wearing suits where everyone else was accustomed to Birkenstocks and turtlenecks. But he stuck with it, and grew to love it more and more. In 1983, he went to Milan. As he walked along, he passed espresso bar after espresso bar. Intrigued, he went inside some, and was delighted by what he found. He discovered not just coffee but a real community, where customers chat with the baristas and linger long after the espresso is gone. Schultz recognized Starbucks' potential. "Starbucks could be a great experience, and not just a great retail store," he realized. Schultz absorbed everything he could about Italy, visiting many of its 200,000 espresso bars. To this day, he credits Starbucks' success to that visit. "Without the romance of Italian espresso, Starbucks would still be what it was, a beloved local coffee bean store in Seattle."

Schultz's bosses were not nearly as enthralled with espresso bars as Schultz. They told him that Starbucks was not a restaurant or bar, but merely a retail operation. Schultz stuck with it and was given the opportunity to test out the concept in 1984. Nearly 400 customers passed through the space on its first day of business, and it was serving 800 customers a day within two months. Despite the success, Baldwin was not happy with the new image of Starbucks. So in 1985, Schultz founded Il Giornale, which offered espresso beverages and brewed coffee, made with Starbucks coffee beans. In 1987 Schultz acquired Starbucks assets and changed his company's name to Starbucks Corporation, and the Starbucks we know today finally became recognizable.

With Starbucks, Schultz always wanted to create "the kind of company that my father never got a chance to work for, in which people were respected." He took the first step towards creating that type of company in 1988, the year his father died, when Starbucks began offering full health benefits to all full and part-time employees. This revolutionary move has earned Starbucks a place on "Fortune Magazine's 100 Best Companies to Work For."

His commitment to honoring his father is not the only way Schultz has honored his roots. Starbucks is a participant in the America SCORES program, a national nonprofit organization that helps children in urban public schools using soccer and literacy. Additionally, the Starbucks Foundation has donated millions of dollars in grants to other literacy and education programs. He has indulged his love for sports by purchasing the Seattle Supersonics, and with the sprouting of several new Starbucks locations in the Hamptons, he continues to share his love of coffee with East End residents. Rumor even has it that when his dogs bother his neighbors on Lily Pond Lane in East Hampton he sends over bags of coffee to apologize.

people could camp out. My guess is there were a thousand horse people there, all busy, but with what? It was at first a mystery.

It turned out, as we visited there three times, that this was an annual endurance run called the 24-hour Biltmore Endurance Challenge, where horsemen from all over the country and all over the world arrive with their horses to compete in a 100-mile ride through the woods on a fixed course, with prizes going to the winners.

I could tell you that a highlight of our trip was to visit the giant dining room at the Biltmore Estate with the table that seats 30 beneath a vaulted ceiling that is seven stories above the floor (where the Hearsts and Morgans hobnobbed with the Whitneys, duPonts and Vanderbilts), but the real highlight, on Sunday afternoon at 6:05 p.m., was standing in the mud under the food tent near the finish line with about twenty other people, watching a woman in boots sitting on a cooler hold up one end of a rabbit ears television antenna so we could get a picture sufficient enough to watch and cheer for the horses charging out of the gate at Churchill Downs trying to win the Kentucky Derby. Now THAT was an experience.

The drive from Charlotte to Asheville is nearly two hours, and though it is a pleasant one, we did stop. We found a wonderful small hill town called Saluda. The main street is one block long, flat, with a row of stores along one side, and two pairs of parallel railroad tracks on the other. Fields and woods are beyond the tracks, so from the stores (and cafes) you look out across the road at the tracks, in front of which is a metal sign announcing that the town is at the top of the steepest railroad grade in the nation. It begins in a valley just to the east of town (beyond a turn —you can't see it) and it rises for three miles before finally reaching the top here at Saluda.

We sat outside at a cafe looking for a train to come through. None did. It occurred to me that sitting there, looking, was the same thing we did at home when we sit in a home with a water view. (We have such a water view.) Something is going to happen. Maybe. And we are looking out at it. At one point, I thought I heard a train whistle. But no, there was nothing.

After a long time of sitting there drinking cappucino and looking out at the tracks, we paid the bill and I asked the waitress what time the train comes through.

"Used to be several a day," she said. "But they stopped three years ago. I don't know why, exactly."

I wondered if not having the train come affected business and, after a minute's hesitation, asked her.

"Nope," she said.

Who's Here

Rona Jaffe
Author

By Dan Rattiner

Rona Jaffe, a small attractive woman in her sixties, lives in an apartment in New York in the winter and in the summer has this neat little former farmhouse in Sagaponack with sliding glass on one side and decks beyond that, lawns beyond that and woods beyond that. It's a peaceful place, and Rona likes to write here on her computer, which occupies a favorite spot on a desk in what is otherwise a neat and sparsely furnished office.

"I like to be alone during the day," Rona says, "and I hardly ever go anywhere. I sit here and write. It's so peaceful. It means a lot to me to be able to do that. I like being with my characters and their lives. It's a way of understanding the world and myself."

At the present time Rona Jaffe is planning her 17th book. She's probably best known for two great bestsellers: The Best of Everything, which came out shortly after she graduated from Radcliffe in the late 50s, and Class Reunion, that came out in 1980, about...well, exactly what it says, the reunion of a class of Radcliffe girls, who haven't seen each other in 40 years. The plans for her new book involves character creation, plot and tone and before she goes off every evening to socialize with friends and go to dinners and parties which she loves to do, she puts in a solid half day on the work.

Rona was born in Brooklyn and raised there for twelve years, the daughter of a grammar school principal who wrote books about mathematics and a mother who was a housewife and provided a relatively strict upbringing.

"I'd ask her why she's being so strict when other parents weren't being so strict and she'd say, 'You should have seen what it was like when I was little."

In a way that was relatively easy to do, because her mother was born on the first day of the beginning of the century: January 1, 1900 and so, whenever Rona at school would look at some invention or development or political change that had happened in the early 20th century, she knew exactly how old her mother was, and how she might have related to it at the time.

"It really developed my interest in historical connections: why people have certain attitudes."

Rona wrote her first poem when she was two and a half. She told her mother she had one; her mother took out a pencil, ripped off the side of a paper bag, and took dictation:

"Said the snow to the clouds / I want to go down to see the world / So the clouds gave a push / And down went the snow to the ground below."

The piece of paper with the poem on it stayed up on the wall for years.

"That's pretty early to be writing," I said. "Was writing your major interest as you were growing up?"

"I decided I wanted to be a writer when I was four years old," Rona said. "It occurred to me at that time that writing could be a job, like being a piano teacher or a school principal. I thought that was great. I remember — I think I was in bed in the time — and I was thinking about it and I thought that what I really wanted was to be a journalist and travel in the jungle with a man to share the experience with."

"You were four years old?"

"I think maybe it came from some movie I saw or a book I read—Tarzan."

"I decided I wanted to be a writer when I was four years old. It occurred to me at that time that writing could be a job."

"I don't think so," I said. "Jane was a wuss."

"Well, maybe it was one of those Katharine Hepburn, Spencer Tracy movies, where they're both journalists."

When Rona was 12 years old, her family moved from Brooklyn to 88th St. and Madison Avenue. Her father had retired from working in the school system and had gone into the stock market.

"He did very well," Rona said. "I think it might have had something to do with all his knowledge of numbers."

Rona grew up going to private school. When she was of grammar school age, she might have gone to public school, but her father didn't want people to think she would be getting good marks because of him, so he sent her to Brooklyn Ethical, a good private school. Later, in Manhattan, Rona went to Dalton, just down the street. She wrote for the literary magazine at Dalton and also was an art editor.

"I studied painting at Dalton," Rona said. "My teacher was Rufino Tamayo. He thought I could be a good painter, but said I would have to give up cartooning, which I was also doing and I didn't want to do that. I was doing these little silhouettes. Tamayo finally left teaching at Dalton. I think he hated teaching little girls."

Rona went to Radcliffe near Cambridge in the 50s and graduated with a degree in English literature. "I ran with this crowd," she said, "that would go to the Copley Bar and drink or listen to Noel Coward. We all thought the 20s were terrific. We lived a kind of retro thing like they do today."

Graduating without a man, unmarried, but with a terrific education, she returned to live with her parents on the Upper East Side and went out looking for a job. She found one as a filing clerk at the publishing house of Fawcett.

"First I was a filing clerk, then a reader, then an associate editor, then an assistant editor, the an editor, and then I quit and wrote The Best of Everything," she grinned.

The story of how she came to write this is a story in itself. While at Fawcett, she got an agent, and in the evenings she would write stories that she would sell to magazines. She was a pretty good writer; her first story appeared in "Seventeen" and she got something of a reputation as a magazine writer. During her second year at Fawcett she wrote a novella of about 70 pages. Her agent sent it around and, "All the publishers wanted to meet me. They thought it was excellently written but they didn't know what to do with it. It got me quite well known, though."

While still at Fawcett, she went out one night with a girlfriend who told her that her boyfriend had dumped her, moved to Los Angeles and had gotten married there. He had asked her to go see him.

"Since it was kind of a crazy mission, she asked me if I would accompany her," said Rona. "I thought it was a great idea. I always wanted to go to Hollywood and meet people like Rock Hudson and Tab Hunter.

"About a week before we were to go, I went up to her office. She was a secretary to Jack

Goodman, who was the head of Simon and Schuster. While I was talking with her, Jack Goodman invited us in and said he had somebody from Hollywood, a filmmaker named Jerry Wald, in his office, and if we wanted to know more about Hollywood we might ask him."

The meeting in that office in Simon and Schuster that day has become part of literary legend. The girls did ask about Rock Hudson. "He flies, he's a fairy," one of the men told them.

"What does that mean?" Rona's friend asked.

"Wald said that he was in New York looking for a property to make a new movie. I need another Kitty Foyle," he said, referring to the book by Christopher Morley."

"Well, Rona can really write," Jack Goodman said. "She's gonna write a hell of a novel someday."

"Well," Wald said. "If she can write that kind of book then she should go ahead and write it and I'll make a movie out of it."

The girls went to Hollywood within the week. "We went by train. My girlfriend was afraid to fly," Rona shrugged. "There was nobody on the train. Everybody flew. Except some middle-aged salesmen who played poker with us for two days and won a lot."

In California they stayed at the Beverly Hilton. Rona's friend would sneak out and meet her boyfriend on street corners. Eventually he asked her to stay on in California and he would put her up and she could be his mistress. So she dumped him, and the two girls returned by train to New York.

While in California Rona had read Kitty Foyle and she had thought, "Well, this is a book about women written by a man. And it's kind of dumb."

When she got home she wrote up a two page summary of the book she planned to write, which would become the Best of Everything.

"It was about what it was really like to grow up in New York, out of college and unmarried, for girls, sleeping with boys, getting abortions, going out with married men. In that age — and this was before the hippie era — it was a shocking idea."

Simon and Schuster loved it and they gave her an advance. "What I did as soon as I got that advance was to move out of my parents' house. I was already 24 and I got my own apartment at 55th and Lex. And for the next eleven months I wrote and edited the book.

"There were four daily papers in New York City and as young Rona Jaffe wrote — the book wasn't even complete — Jerry Wald was giving interviews about how this movie was going to be sensational and Paul Newman was interested in it, and Joanne Woodward was interested in it. Like it was his book. He liked to say he had optioned it from me before it was completed, but it was just all talk between us.

"I remember once he came over — I was about three quarters done — and he said, 'I want to see what you've written.' Here I was 24, and I said, 'You can't see it. When it's done you can do whatever you want to it. You can change my five women into four male bellhops if that's what you want to do, but you only get to see it when I'm done.' And he left."

She had moved out of her parents' house in September and started work on it in October and finished in March. She wrote with two fingers banging on a typewriter ten pages a day toward the end, the editors were rushing her so.

"I had started writing so young," she said, "I could not do touch typing because I couldn't reach all the keys properly, so I had become very good at two finger typing. Toward the end, as March approached, my fingers were bleeding.

"The minute the book came out in hardcover, the New York Times wrote a rather condescending review. 'We've had so much publicity about this girl,' they started out," Rona said, "but there was a lot of favorable publicity."

"How many copies of the book were sold?" I asked.

"Oh, it was on the bestseller list forever. Millions of copies. And you know, many of the copies, especially the paperback ones, were bought and passed around so they had many readers. I used to go to book signings and some secretary would come in with a hardcover version and ask to me sign it to 'All the Girls on the 43rd Floor of Metropolitan Life.' It was all thumbed and worn out."

The movie came out a year later. It starred Suzy Parker, Joan Crawford, Hope Lange, Diana Baker, Louis Jordan and Bob Evans. And it too was a big hit.

book review: the wonder spot by Melissa Bank

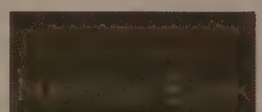

By Eunice Miller

It starts with a "perfect beach day" and ends with a perfect "night." In between, Melissa Bank, a resident of Sag Harbor and New York, recounts for us in The Wonder Spot a spotless narrative of episodes in a woman named Sophie's life. At first glance, it reads like a witty date-book minus the souvenir matches and imprinted restaurant napkins that teenage girls used to enshrine their memories of wonderful as well as painful relationships.

If "The child is the father of the man," the first chapter, "Boss of the World," predicts the woman Sophie will be. Set in the Philadelphia suburbs during the post President Kennedy days, Sophie at age twelve already has clear ideas regarding tradition, rules of society and authority figures. She also begins to establish the pattern of being the outsider even when in friendships or intimate relationships. She is uncomfortable with society and with herself. She copes with this discomfort by being dismissive, judgmental or rejecting.

Sophie's family is intact, with grandparents, mother and father and an older and younger brother. The family is ordinary and follows the script. Sophie alone is the challenger. When dressing for a family ritual coming of age party, she challenges her mother who is concerned that she is not wearing a slip, "I'd decided slips were a pointless formality like the white gloves my mother had finally giving up asking me to wear."

At the party, Sophie's attitudes and coping mechanisms are revealed. She anticipates that the party only would bring "boredom." She is ridiculing of celebrant Rebecca, an aspiring ballerina. When her mother later remarks that Rebecca is beautiful like a "long stemmed rose," Sophie retorts, "She is more like a long piece of hair with hair."

Sophie escapes from the party and finds respite with an eighth grade boy, Danny. Relationships with men would continue to be the spot where she always returns when trying to escape the unsatisfying.

She has serial relationships, serial jobs and serial housing. She is more on the boyfriend track than the "mommy track." The only constants are her complaints about the attitudes and lifestyle of her family. She is shocked that her mother gave up her first love, Len, because of family disapproval. The mother says, "My generation was more obedient than yours."

It is ironic that she has the most disdain for her maternal grandmother whom she experiences as continually critical. Our heroine does not seem to notice that her own attitudes are constantly rejecting. Each job fell short, each boyfriend was flawed and each apartment certainly not The Wonder Spot.

She is faithful to her childhood pattern of rejecting rules. Her job at Steinhardt Publishers was only seven minutes away from her apartment, "which gave me a fighting chance of being on time, though I usually wasn't." Sophie still is fighting the fashion war and mocks the clothing of the other office workers. She records, "Francine Lawlor wore fluffy once-white blouses the worst of which had a Louis XIV flap she decorated with a Phi Beta Kappa pin."

There seems to be no change in our leading lady through out her twenty-five recorded years. To the startled reader the most marked change happens to Sophie's now widowed mother, Joyce. The mother becomes the rule breaker. This role reversal is unsettling even to the author, Bank, and she soon redeems her. Bank's message is that change is for the younger generation.

Sophie spells out her concept of self-identity, freedom to explore all the possibilities. She sums it up, "I was also thinking of becoming a cartoonist, a songwriter, an underwater photographer, a peace activist and a zoo keeper.

Author Bank tunes into the decline in "Middle Brow Culture" that is less "Rembrandt, more me," that is reported by David Brooks. Sophie is the personification of "me." Smoothly written in a humorous style, The Wonder Spot should tickle your funny bone. It will be a great chick flick and give mothers and daughters much to talk about this summer.

The Wonder Spot by Melissa Bank, published 2005 by Penguin Group, is available at Borders and East End Books.

Why?

returns with frequency. The repetitive pattern is what makes it a paraphilia. And the reason for the repetition may be that his fantasy is not realized the way he wants it to be." Although many chemical as well as hormonal treatments have been tried with limited success, Dr. Becker maintains that there is no known cure for paraphilias.

Rape is generally defined as the domination of one person over another by physical threat of harm while forcing sexual intercourse. It can occur between strangers in a random assault or between two people who know one another. Among the individual factors said to increase the risk of a man becoming a rapist are coercive sexual fantasies, impulsive and antisocial tendencies, hostility towards women, a history of sexual abuse as a child, and witnessing family violence as a child.

According to the US Department of Justice, somewhere in America a woman is raped every two minutes. Victims of rape and sexual assault often develop Rape Trauma Syndrome, or RTS, which is characterized by feelings of guilt, shame, tension, anger, eating disorders, depression, sexual dysfunction and suicide attempts.

Since Mr. Giraldo's arrest and subsequent incarceration, all the police departments involved have expressed relief. According to Detective Sergeant Randy Hintze of the Southampton Town Police, since the identification of Mr. Giraldo by one of his victims, additional charges have been filed with the D.A.'s office and the results of DNA tests are pending.

"We're happy that East Hampton was able to break the case. The beaches are a lot safer at this point," said Detective Sergeant Herman Lamison of The South Hampton Village Police in a recent telephone interview.

Detective Sergeant Dunn of the East Hampton Village Police agreed. "We're very happy we've caught him. We feel he's been a menace. People can now feel safe."

For the citizens of the Hamptons, their ordeal is over. Mr. Giraldo's trial is just beginning. He returns to court on July 7.

Island, and pitched my idea to the owner of the vacant building.

Alas, he was only interested in selling the building, not helping artist and I was in no position to purchase anything, let alone a two story commercial building. So the dream ended.

Not long after, it was a building on the west end of Patchogue that reinvigorated the dream. Sitting on a plot of twelve acres was a building I had seen hundreds of times. Most people referred to it as "The old red brick building." It was actually an historical series of buildings known as the Lace Mill. Built in the late 1800s, the mill had seen many tenants and even played a role in both WWI and WW2. It was the place that put more bread on the tables of more Patchogue families than any other business in the town's history.

Unfortunately, time and the local economy were no friends to the Mill. She had, like the Bulova Building, fallen to the occasional vandalism and much neglect. I found her to be beautiful and full of existing and potential inspiration. This would become the artist center, I thought. It had hundreds of rooms/spaces to do everything from sculpture to photography to film making to painting and music.

Alas, the owner and the village were interested in selling and/or demolishing the property, not helping artists. Again the dream died.

However, like the mighty Phoenix, it rose once more, this time in Yaphank. The county had moved their "infirmary" from a wondeful multi-winged building constructed in the 1930s into a brand new brick and aluminum rectangle a mile down the road.

Like I had done with the Lace Mill, I sneaked into the infirmary on several occasions doing some unofficial scouting. Of all buildings I had looked at, this one had the best existing facilities. With its many different sized rooms, running water, existing stage and projectionist booth, wheel chair ramps, wide doors, court yard and more, this building would make a perfect artist center. Not only was the facility ready made, it was located close to both Expressway, and Sunrise highway; furthermore, it was three walking minutes from a LIRR stop.

I designed and drew up plans. There'd be darkrooms, music rooms, live theatre, indoor

"What did you parents think about all this?" I asked.

"Well, they were very proud of me but they were also embarrassed at some of the sex scenes."

"So you had all this money and all this fame. What did you do?"

"I went to Rio. I thought about some writers I knew, who had a hit the first time out. They were like guys hanging out at P.J. Clarke's living on their past glory and I thought that's not for me, I've got to get going on my next book right away."

She decided that if she could write about girls who were unmarried after college, she could write about girls who did get married and how miserable they were after they got married.

"The book was called Away From Home," Rona said. "A publisher sent me to Rio for two months. I wanted to do my research there. It may sound odd, but at the time big companies would send their executives and their families down to places like Rio, where corporations had factories, and put them up in western style homes. And it was wonderful for the guys because they had their work there. But for the girls, who had married young and for approval of this catch, there was no infrastructure to reinforce their marriage and so now they had to look at the truth.

"I figured my job in Rio was to interview at least 50 married women and find out what their experiences were. And it was easy to do. I was so famous from my first book by that time I arrived at the airport I was in all the gossip columns in the English papers.

"I was put up at the Copacabana Palace Hotel Apartments right on the beach at Copacabana and anybody I wanted to meet I could. I made lots of friends and I'd tell someone I wanted to meet, someone who had a certain kind of experience or who had a certain kind of marital point of view and people would lead me to other people.

"I met one woman who told me that she really found her husband disgusting and she had to get drunk every time her husband wanted to have sex with her."

Away From Home came out in 1960 and was another success. Her next book, a children's book, called Last of the Wizards, she wrote because she always wanted to write a children's book. And then she was essentially off and running, writing a book every two years, which she has done to the present day.

"When did you first come out to the Hamptons?"

"Oh, I came out in the 60s," she said. "I rented with a girlfriend and her boyfriend and we lived in this horrible shack on the grounds of a nice house in East Hampton. Then for many years I didn't come out here but went to Greenwich, Connecticut where my parents had moved. Then I had a boyfriend for a lot of years and we used to go out to Los Angeles for the summer and then here I am back in Sagaponack. I've been here for about fifteen years now. I love Sagaponack. It's so open and pretty; I never have to leave the house."

"What do you when you're not writing?" I asked.

"Well, when I used to be asked what I did when I wasn't writing, I'd say I'd walk more, swim more, go to the exercise studio more, but now I actually do those things. And I do love to go out in the evening. I enjoy Nick and Toni's and I have lots of friends and I go to dinner parties."

Rona has traveled all over the world. She's never married, but for almost fifteen years she lived with Tom McDermott, a TV producer who passed away in the late 1980s.

"It's fair to say I never really wanted to get married per se," Rona said, "but I've always liked living with one person, someone you know who loves you and you love them and you don't have to spend a lot of time out looking for a member of the opposite sex and you have the relationship and the writing and all is right with the world."

Whispers
With Gina Glickman

"P. Diddy Piper"

This past Saturday in East Hampton, Sean "P-Diddy" Combs played the town Pied Piper to a handful of skateboarder kids who skidded into the trendy clothing store Obligato, begging for autographs. The kids quickly started to form a line around the cash register while Combs was busy offering fashion advice to the mother of his son, Christian, model Kim Porter. Diddy happily stopped and signed his name directly onto a slew of skateboards as the other shoppers, including the store owners and myself, pretended not to notice the flurry of celebrity activity.

The P. Diddy buzz traveled around town and continued throughout the holiday weekend, thanks to the efforts of PR dream team Lizzie Grubman and Jonathan Cheban. The power duo arranged for Diddy to host a last minute July 4th party at Star Room Sunday evening. At the beginning of the summer both Grubman and Cheban who officially joined forces earlier this year, promised Star Room would again, "continue to reign as the hottest night club in the Hamptons." If celebrity turnout is any indication, The Star Room is certainly living up to its name. Saturday night, Cheban left the PR responsibilities to his partner, while he played official host to the launch of his Clarendon clothing line. As Cheban entertained the masses, Pauly Shore aimlessly floated around the club, Jamie-Lynn and husband AJ DiScala shared a booth in the downstairs VIP area with Nicky Hilton and boyfriend, Entourage star Kevin Connolly. Nicky told me, "I love Jon's line; I mean I'm a designer, I'm very picky and he just has great t-shirts, they're very cute. You can wear them during the day, at night. I love them."

Earlier that same evening, the president of Blue Star Jets Todd Rome and his wife, Carole, hosted a private party at their Southampton home, where I got a chance to chat with singer Blu Cantrell. Blu was hanging with her posse of girls and music producer Rob Boldt, while gearing up to host her own party with Matt Heien, Sunday evening at Boutique Lounge, promoting her latest single, "Cha-Cha." Cantrell revealed she is single and open to meeting Mr. Right, "I mean, it's kind of hard in my business, but eventually he'll come along. He has to be very secure and very strong, taller than me. But, I don't discriminate." Model turned entrepreneur and VP for Blue Star Jets, Debbie Dickinson, sister of "Top Model" judge Janice, helped organize the holiday celebration complete with a Valentino fashion show styled by Edward Tricomi and an array of Bentleys parked on the front lawn for partygoers to test drive.

Sunday evening, Rick and Kathy Hilton insisted they weren't cramping Nicky's style when they arrived at Star Room for P. Diddy's July 4th celebration. Kathy told me, "I learn a Highway and both he and his sister run it today. Schneiderman is a former East Hampton Town Supervisor and, most recently, was elected to the County Legislature to represent this district. It was perfectly natural that he might present a bill for consideration by the Legislature, which he did. His plan calls for the purchase of a powerful telescope, 32mm, a telescope that is more than twice as powerful as the one used in the only other observatory on the East End, the Custer Observatory in Southold.

Schneiderman explained in the presentation of his bill that he had found this telescope, used, for sale in Arizona. It had been built for the Biosphere, a private venture that constructed an amazing glass and steel dome building in the desert north of Tuscon which for several years operated as an entirely self contained earth environment, complete with animals, flowers, lakes, varying weather patterns and half a dozen scientists, who stayed in it for months and years at a time studying what it might be like living in such a structure on another planet. When the Biosphere reduced its operations, the big telescope there was put up for sale. But there were no takers. Now the price had been reduced to $240,000.

And Schneiderman has put it on reserve, pending the legislature's approval and the County Executive's signature.

In the event, the legislature did approve it. It is quite a small expense. However, the County Executive — and this was two weeks ago — said he'd like to think about it. The legislature, he knew, might override him if he chose not to sign it. But when it was presented to him, it was just four days before summer break. If he did not sign it before the summer break, he could sign it afterwards. And if he did that, then the legislature would not be able to override it, because that would be the end of the budget for the year.

Now, this past week, as the legislature has gone out on break, he has announced that that is exactly what he wants to do. He will not sign it. It is dead.

When asked about it, Executive Levy said he thought it would present security problems. It was true that out there toward the Point there are very dark skies at night and looking at the heavens would be just perfect through a telescope. But for that very reason, it might be dangerous. With the dark skies, there might be people with bad intentions lurking in the woods. If you had people go there to look through the telescope — or to see the view of the stars projected onto a flat screen TV nearby, which is the latest technology for visitors to rural observatories — and they had to walk back and forth to their cars in the parking lot, well, that could be a problem.

This reasoning, in my opinion, is among the most stupid things I ever heard of. It could be said of any outdoor nighttime activity — from a miniature golf course to a disco to the Long Island Ducks baseball games in Central Islip. As a matter of fact, there already are two nighttime activities out at Third House — the Shakespeare Performances there in the open air theatre by the parking lot, and the wild west buckboard ride, Barbecue and Show in another part of the ranchlands a mile or two away.

As for observatories, there is the one in Southold, which is open to the public at night, and on Nantucket, where the Vestal St. Observatory far off on a hill in the center of that island is one of that place's biggest attractions. As a matter of fact, charging a few dollars admission, it actually MAKES money for those that run it.

The real reason Executive Levy does not want to approve this tiny expenditure, people say, is because here at the last minute he is mad at the legislature for putting things back into the budget after he persuaded them to take them out. He's dealing with a $210.2 million budget for 2006. It is absurd that he would turn away the approval of $220,000 for a used high power telescope of this caliber because of a problem with dark skies.

I think the State of New York should consider buying this telescope for the eastern end of Long Island. They have ample facilities available in a dark sky environment in Montauk. It could be used high on a hill near the radar tower at the Camp Hero State Park. Camp Hero is a military park. Observation, along with defense, was its mission.

It could be used at the Montauk Downs State Park building, a great pyramid affair that practically has an observatory, pre-built, in its eaves. It could also be used as an observatory site in Montauk for SUNY Stony Brook, which already has educational facilities at the old Southampton College Campus and in East Hampton where they own the Pollock-Krasner House. As a matter of fact, Mr. Schneiderman, in the run up to his presentation to the County Legislature, made contact with and got a tentative approval from SUNY Stony Brook to become involved in the project.

I think having an observatory for star gazing as a publicly owned facility in Montauk in the dark sky area between town and the Lighthouse is a terrific idea. It is unique, educational, fascinating, and an excellent family outing for visitors and local people alike.

If nobody else steps forward with this idea, I think that Legislator Schneiderman should present this project again when summer break is over. Maybe Levy will come around. Surely he can see this is the right thing to do.

and outdoor films screenings, photo studios, some big enough to shoot automobiles, a coffee bar, a cafeteria, painting and drawing studios, a gallery, an art supply store, classes for all of the above and an educational connection to the country farm next door. We were going to be a non-profit organization who's mission was to establish a center where kids and adults could come to study, participate, make and or purchase art. A place where commercial artist could rent everything they need from backdrops to lights to models. I was confident that in time we'd eventually have the largest and most desired artist center in the country.

I approached two County Legislators and won both their support. Legislator Brian Foley helped me approach the Department of Public Works and win their support. Next it was onto my fellow artist and art supporters. Their support was won before I completed my pitch. Then on to the big stage, a meeting with the then Suffolk County attorney. Legislator Foley, the DPW and myself did our best to sell the idea to the man who'd bring my proposal directly to the County Executive. With great anticipation, we all held our collective breath for a few weeks.

Alas, the County was only interested in selling the building. "The county is not in business to help artists," was the reply we received.

Three strikes, I was out. I gave up on my dream of establishing a place where artists can work, live, collaborate and create. My vision to establish a central location where art and creativity was born, fostered, tweaked, dissected, bought and shared was put to rest.....until I learned of/saw the Bulova Building. My first thought was, the dream is still alive. But pragmatism quickly set in and I said, "Why waste my time and efforts again, I'll only get another "No."

Months went by and then I saw a recent issue of Dan's Papers with an article on the Bulova Building. I called David, the author, and ran my idea by him. "That's a great idea," he said. So now, I'm at it again. Per David's suggestion, I'm writing this letter to the Mayor and the people of Sag Harbor.

As you've read, I have a non-quenchable thirst to establish an artist center. If you haven't figured it out by now, I want your Bulova Building to be the place. Will the people of Sag Harbor be the ones to finally embrace the project, or will it die once again?

People the world over know the East End of Long Island as a place for artists and art. However there's no such thing as a central place for art or artists. All across this Island and across the country, the only place artists have to associate with "their own" are at gallery receptions. They have no places of creative incubation. No place exists where an artist can walk out of his/her studio and knock on the door of a fellow painter and ask for advice with a technique or to borrow some burnt sienna. Where can a sculptor open her window and listen to the cello player in the courtyard? Where can an

Meeting Up With Actor Alan Alda

By Dan Rattiner

There was a private party at the new Japanese Sushi restaurant at Montauk Harbor the other night and my wife and I were guests of Michael Bregman, the owner. Michael is the son of Marty Bregman, the movie producer who is filming Sweet Liberty in and around Sag Harbor this summer, and since we had been told that this party was to be in honor of some of the cast members, naturally we were kind of hoping that Alan Alda, who wrote, directs and stars in this movie, would be there.

When we got there around eight o'clock, he wasn't. In fact, it turned out we were the first people to arrive for the dinner part as most of these people, for some reason, apparently come at least an hour late for everything and wind up eating at midnight or something. So much for Hollywood. There are no more than ten tables in this entire restaurant. It is a tiny place between Tuma's Tackle Shop and Gosman's Restaurant, and, since we were so early, we had the pick of the lot. We chose to sit somewhere in the middle so that when Alan Alda arrived we wouldn't be too far from him. We also thought that if you're going to be in the middle of a party you might as well be right in the middle of it rather than off in some corner somewhere so that was another motivation for our decision.

Betty and Perry Duryea, the former Minority Leader of the State Senate, arrive and joined us. They live in Montauk and we have known them for quite some time, although we hadn't actually seen Perry recently.

"It's been awhile," Perry said, "How long has it been?"

"I'm famished," Betty said.

"I am too," I said.

None of us were very used to eating this late.

Another group of people arrived, about five of them, all young and attractive and very Hollywood looking, and they sat at a table several down from us. A plate of cold sushi was brought to them.

"See if you can get the waiter," I said to Betty. "It must be all right to eat."

She did, and they brought us some food too.

More people arrived and still more people. Pretty soon there were about fifty or sixty smiling and laughing, standing or sitting around in this little restaurant, all of them either extremely attractive or unusual looking. For example, there was a handsome, slender woman with gold rimmed glasses, a great shock of dirty blonde hair that looked as if it had just been dried off with a towel after having just been in the ocean, and a leather pouch attached to the belt of her jeans that might have contained some kind of communications device. Then there was an older man with a full white beard and an ill-fitting checked shirt who sort of looked like a creative artist. And then there was Alan Alda and his wife. They were now sitting, as they did for the entire evening, with another couple at the table just adjacent to ours. Alan faced us.

"Alan Alda looks just like I expected him to look," I said.

He seemed to be very relaxed. He leaned back in his chair, laughed every once in a while at whatever was being said, and occasionally took a swig of a bottle of Japanese beer that he has in his hand.

"That's his wife to the right," my wife said. "They say she's very accomplished."

Everyone at the other tables laughed and told jokes. People moved from table to table and slapped each other on the back. It was very much a fine old party. Young Michael came over.

"Is everything all right?" he asked.

Oh, yes, we said. By this time, there had been lots of food brought to our table, and indeed, it certainly was all right.

Betty Duryea told us a bit about her children. Lynn was up in Maine doing pottery and Chip was in Montauk, managing the lobster house. Tracy and I told the Duryeas about the time, four years ago when, after our wedding, we went down to their lobster house in our tuxedos and gowns and walked through the slop and running water to get out to the lobster house dock where the ship the Appledore several years ago in Sag Harbor and how it had gotten stuck on a bar one hundred yards off the dock and all fifty school kids had to be evacuated.

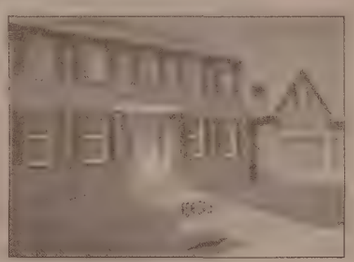

Marty Bregman, Michael's father, came by and said hello to the Duryeas. They are good friends and go back a long way. Marty left and went over to talk to Alan Alda.

I asked Perry what he had been doing these days since he was out of politics and he said he still works for this chemical company based in Connecticut and that he flies around a lot in his plane.

"Do you go fishing much?" I asked.

"Oh, no, not much," he said.

"Oh yes, he does," Betty said. "He was out yesterday."

A couple of hours passed and everyone seemed to be having a wonderful time. Alan Alda, for his part, had stayed in the same seat and had been visited, every once in a while, by various people from around the room who came by to his table to say hello. For example, the fellow with the checkered shirt and the beard came over to his table and stood there for awhile and seemed to have a very serious conversation with him.

Around eleven thirty, people started to leave. Since we had been there since eight and since we had now finished eating, it really had been a long time to be sitting in one spot and so we started to get our things to leave too.

"You want to say hello to Alan Alda?" my wife asked.

Mr. Alda was, at this particular time, in animated conversation with a middle-aged man who might have been an assistant director or a scenic designer or something and he seemed very engrossed in whatever it was they were talking about. Certainly he was very relaxed and having a fine time. It occurred to me he probably didn't want to be bothered, really.

"Nah," I said.

And so, we left. •

lot from both my daughters. Before I started shooting my show, Paris told me to just be myself and to never trust the producers." Nicky who was already inside with Kevin and the rest of his crew including Entourage co-star Adrian Grenier, must have been on their best behavior. The Hiltons were up way past their bedtime since Combs didn't arrive till 2 a.m. I asked Diddy if he still planned to have his notorious "White Party" in the Hamptons later this summer and he replied, "Yeah, I plan to." Celebrity translation, just wait and see.

20 Years Ago In Dan's Papers July 11, 1985

Overcrowded Weekend Results in Strange Behavior Here and There

By Dan Rattiner

This past Fourth of July weekend was the single most crowded weekend I can ever recall on the East End. Parking downtown was virtually impossible. It was not a question of finding a parking space – this was out of the question – it was a question of whether one could park illegally long enough to run into stores and back out again without being ticketed.

The stores themselves were totally unprepared for the hordes of people. They were well staffed, but what do you do when twenty people are trying to buy things at one counter with two cash registers and three clerks. Or what do you do when you simply run out of whatever you are selling? I was in markets that ran out of milk, delis that had no rolls, newspaper stores that had no newspapers. It was crazy.

Of course, what we local people have learned from all of this is to do our weekend shopping on Thursday or at the very latest Friday morning before the hordes come. After that, with rare exception, we simply stay home Friday until Monday unless wherever we want to go is quite near by.

Shopping of this sort, by the way, reminds me of the kind of panic shopping that precedes the arrival of a pending hurricane. It is September third, hurricane Carol is moving up the Carolina coast and within thirty six hours should hit Shinnecock. Everybody into the stores for water, flashlights, batteries and candles.

Well, maybe what we had over Fourth of July was a hurricane. Hurricane Manhattan. Rush out and stock up on Perrier, fresh fruit and bagels.

Of course, driving on Montauk Highway over the weekend was practically out of the question as well. It was wall to wall cars, like a rush hour traffic jam backed up to the Queens Midtown Tunnel. Only here, instead of paying a toll to get into Manhattan, they were paying a toll to get onto a beach, or into a day of shopping.

The traffic was so bad that, remarkably, some people simply gaveup trying to get where they wanted to go and, instead, had picnics or scratch badminton games right there alongside of the road.

The main office of Dan's Papers is right on the Montauk Highway in Bridgehampton, of course, and so all day we were able to watch this slow crawl of traffic, usually backed up east bound from the light in the center of town, but sometimes backed up the other way as well, from the light in front of the Caldor shopping center, and it made you wonder.

Porsche. Maserati. Limousine. BMW. Jaguar. Audi. Mercedes. BMW. Mercedes. Not a damn thing born in the U.S.A. What's the matter with these people, anyway?

The front lawn of Dan's Papers, if you have never been by our place, is kind of set up as a miniature sculpture garden and park. We have a little lawn, some flowers, a deck with park benches, a big ten ton sculpture by Jeffery Parson and, along the side of the building, a picnic table. Every once in a while, when the weather is nice, the staff will picnic out on the picnic table, and spread out on the lawn, and on Friday around noontime, July 4th, that is exactly what I thought was going on when I looked out the window. When I looked a little closer, however, I realized that I didn't recognize a soul. They were total strangers.

I went out the front door to talk to them, of course. This was my place, after all, and it was private property they were picnicking on. Still, I felt no anger at their intrusion. Instead, I felt sympathy. It was a hot afternoon, and out on the highway, a dozen yards away, the cars were idling at a standstill.

"Hi."

"Hello."

"Having a picnic?"

"Yup. We couldn't stand it anymore."

"Well, this is my place and I just thought I'd come out and say hello. You're welcome. I just wanted to know what is going on."

"Care for a glass of wine?"

LEARN TO SAIL

It's Easy To Learn With Professionals

We have taught hundreds of people of all ages to sail - to enjoy the thrill of the wind moving a boat through the water and to experience the quiet beauty and relaxation of sailing.

The waters of Peconic and Gardiners Bay are a special part of the East End. They should be part of your enjoyment of the area.

Our two day beginner course is taught on 23 foot keelboats. After the course you can rent a 23 foot sailboat. And you can follow the beginner course with more advanced courses.

spills and dredging are just a few of the reasons. However, Mr. Hoffman does not want to give up. It's his land and he says he has zoning to build a marina.

The Southampton Trustees were able to hold off the construction of the marina last year by ordering Mr. Hoffman to hire an independent consulting firm to do an environmental analysis of the site. The company hired, known as H2M, was paid $55,000 to issue a report on the impact on the area and whether or not it would be appropriate to build a marina. The results of the report are back, and H2M says that the amount of clams and eel grass beds in the area are low, indicating that a marina would be okay to build.

Baykeeper Kevin McAllister completely disagrees with the report, claiming that the bay bottom would be significantly impacted by a marina in the same way that all marinas do damage.

The debate on whether or not to build this marina is a positive thing, in my opinion, because barriers in this beautiful area need to be in place to prevent over use and over development of the land. Everyone knows that we as people like to take advantage of our natural resources so we can park a couple of boats and fill them up with gas. However, there are already plenty of marinas around that allow us to do this and they are in areas that have already been developed and are already hustle and bustle with activity. In my opinion, expanding these types of projects are not good to do in areas where the local economy is not struggling. However, this is America, and people do have the right to start their own businesses. What bothers me and so many others is when developers destroy the very land that so many of us have come to respect and appreciate. Protecting the environment in this area is not only an important economic battle; it is a way of life.

Whether or not H2M was biased in their report because they were paid directly by the developer also raises an eyebrow for many people, but not much can be said or done about that. One option for the town is to do their own analysis of the area by a different firm to see if their data matches that of the developer's data. Whether or not the town would be willing to do that is another story.

eighty-two-year-old illustrator draw a twenty-year-old model while listening to a thirty-year-old sax player work out a new tune? Nowhere.

Instead of turning an historical building into condominiums or a hotel, why not turn it into something unique? Every town has condos and a "luxury" hotel. Do you really want to be like every other town? Like the Torpedo Factor, the Bulova Building could become a great tourist attraction or, if bringing more artists to the area is not high on the agenda, it could be a low-key place for just the artist. Mr. Mayor and the people of Sag Harbor, Patchogue destroyed its greatest historical sites with delusions of changing and improving their Main Street. Instead, their plan actually put out of business one of the county's oldest department stores, Sweezey's, and destroyed the famous "Four corners." Don't let some "developer" destroy yet another piece of history on this island by throwing up a bunch of condos or a hotel.

If funds can be raised, I'll guarantee the following. I will lead a team of talented artists, designers and builders to create and establish a facility that will be spoken about and will attract artists and visitors from all corners of the globe. Our project will become an artistic giant and most likely, a financial success.

People Portraits – $2,500

This portraiture in acrylic on canvas features abstractions of color and shape that come together to provide a true reflection of the character of each sitter. Whether it be you, your spouse, child, parent or honoree, or as a gift or self-indulgence, these three feet by four feet, one-and-one-half-inches-thick studies, based on your favorite photograph, are truly kinetic, startlingly real and disarmingly dramatic. This work is done on commission and takes 4-6 weeks for completion.

Available by Linda Roscetti, 337 E 5th Street, NYC, P.O. Box 557, Saugerties, NY. 914-388-0603. Or via e-mail at: lindaroscetti@earthlink.net.

CHATEAU LASCAUX 2000 (Bordeaux Superieur) "One of the few wines of this pedigree that shows some toasty oak along with some serious, ripe, red and black currant fruit, this Bordeaux Superieur is spicy, well-made." -Robert Parker (4834)	12.95	155.40
CHATEAU MAISON NEUVE 2000 (Montagne St.-Emilion) A superb combination of 60% Merlot, 30% Cabernet Sauvignon and 10% Cabernet Franc, this 2000 combines uncommon backbone with a framboise-scented nose, rich texture and an agreeable style. (4805)	13.49	161.88
CHATEAU MAURAC 2001 (Haut-Medoc) This vineyard occupies the eastern part of a large gravel plateau where the old vines respond to the warmth of the gravel soil by becoming very concentrated. (4813)	16.95	203.40
CHATEAU MAYNE VIEIL 2001 (Fronsac) Made from 90% Merlot and 10% Cabernet Franc, this Fronsac is well-structured with good concentration and elegant tannins. (4815)	11.49	137.88
CHATEAU ROQUEFORT 2001 (Bordeaux) Crafted from a skillful blend of 90% Merlot and 10% Cabernet Franc, this wine is superb! (4808)	10.95	131.40
CHATEAU SARDY 2000 (Cotes de Bergerac) Chateau Sardy is an old, Perigord-style stone house that is surrounded by ornate Florentine gardens. The wines are soft and pleasing with delicate strawberry fruit. (4827)	9.95	119.40
VIEUX CHATEAU LANDON 2000 (Medoc) A large proportion of Cabernet Sauvignon gives a classic structure to this wine. Aged in oak for one year, it displays a good body, intense cassis and great harmony. (4831)	14.79	177.48

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #356
Beach Baskets - Back to the Future

If you decide to live anywhere on the New England coast, you must learn about beach baskets, not to be confused with the high tech "beach carriers" of the West Coast. The rule in my family was, if you're going to the beach, you have to let everyone else know. I don't recall ever being at the beach with just my mom and brothers, there was always family that showed up and everyone brought their official beach basket or cooler.

The 1950s: My grandmother had a big wicker beach basket with sides that flipped up. The contents were always the same: sandwiches in tin foil, P&J for kids; baloney for the men; Noxema; Entenmann's Crumb Cake; YooHoo's; floppy hats; Brownie camera, and a bottle of vinegar for jellyfish stings. My grandfather packed the cooler. Contents: beer and bait. Whether or not we were going fishing, the bait always stayed in the cooler. Bait served a dual purpose as bait and a biochemical beer protection barrier to keep the women and children from opening that stinky cooler, and worked every time.

The 1960s: My mother had a nice wicker beach basket too. She was a single mother of four. Her contents were: sandwiches in unmanageably clingy Saran Wrap; just P&J's; Noxema; Entenmann's Crumb Cake; YooHoo's; sunglasses replaced floppy hats; Kodak camera; tee shirts for sunburn protection; plastic shovels and old kitchen spoons; a magazine for reading, shooing flies. swatting children which could be your own or some stray kid who wandered into your strike zone, and a bottle of vinegar for jellyfish stings. The men brought the cooler. Contents: beer and bait.

The 1970s: My mother got remarried and had another child. As a teenager, I convinced her to ditch the old basket for a new insulated plastic beach tote with a flower power design and an easy-tear plastic lining. The contents were: sandwiches in fold-over sandwich bags, P&J for Mom and kids; yogurt for me; sunglasses; sunscreen replaced Noxema; baby oil for me (so I could roast my skin in my string bikini); a transistor radio so 77WABC could turn me over every 15 minutes (all I needed was a skewer going through my body); Kodak 110 slim camera, and a can of Bactine spray to replace the bottle of vinegar for jellyfish stings. It worked just as well, only was modern and more expensive. My stepfather packed the cooler, per instructions he received, with beer and bait. But he used to sneak in Cokes for my mother which wasn't really allowed, but the men in the family looked the other way because he was new.

The 1980s: I had left home, but on my return visits to New York to renew my accent, I noticed that mother had backslid. The flower power beach tote was mysteriously missing and she had a new wicker beach basket. The contents were: sandwiches in unsealable zip lock bags; P&J for kids; baloney for men; fruit roll-ups; juice boxes; orange drink; sunscreen; sunglasses; a crossword puzzle magazine; Polaroid camera, and Solarcaine spray for jellyfish stings. My stepfather packed the cooler with beer and bait — he was with the program now....

The 1990s: I returned home as a single mom. I bought a wicker beach basket. Why? Because I understood the wisdom of the New England woman.... you can shake the sand out easier, it's sturdy, it floats and has enough weight to it so you can discreetly bump your kids along as they walk back to the car. The contents: sandwiches in zip lock bags with color stripes, P&J for kids, baloney sandwiches for brothers; gummy bears; juice boxes; bottled water; polarized sunglasses; sunscreen spray and tee shirts; some light reading; 101 Ways to Axe Your Ex; Noxema, and vinegar for jellyfish stings. Vinegar's cheaper and effective and you can locate your child by smell, just like a mother seal, which makes you feel closer to nature in case sand in your bathing suit isn't close enough. The men brought coolers. Contents: beer and bait. I had a discussion with them about bringing soft drinks instead of beer, but they said, "Then what's the point of going to the beach?" I had one of those, "If I had testosterone, I'd understand this," moments, so I left it alone.

The 2000s: My daughter is grown and gone, so now I'm only one kid away from Empty Pest Syndrome. I bought a sturdy wicker beach basket with sides that flip up. The contents — Shelter Island Classics: delicious sandwiches in zip lock bags from Fedi's; Noxema; Entenmann's Crumb Cake from George's IGA; YooHoo's; Sobe's; sparkly visor from Bliss's; book of puzzles from Jack's Marina; digital camera and a bottle of vinegar for jellyfish stings. Gee, I wonder what my brothers will bring.....

Change can be a tricky thing. But mom took to life at The Bristal with ease. She gets more done with each new day, and all with genuinely caring friends – residents and staff, alike. My greatest comfort comes in knowing mom isn't living alone. From the shopping trips, to the card games, to the fitness room, salon, cinema and more — she's again the social butterfly I remember so well growing up. Best of all: She's eating nutritious gourmet meals, the experienced staff adores her and her eyes are smiling once again. This is my mom. Active again. Life is better at The Bristal.

SOUTHAMPTON FRESH AIR HOME

It was cloudy, misty and the rain was threatening, but the 18th Annual American Picnic to benefit the Southampton Fresh Air Home happened without the downpour that conveniently happened later. This is a true family event with rides, crafts, carnival booths and kid-friendly food for the young ones. Touted as an All-American party, it was just that, topped off with Grucci fireworks. This event raises over 40% of the annual operating expenses for the Southampton Fresh Air Home, a residential camp for physically handicapped children from the Tri-State area.

State Finally Agrees To Let Winemakers Sell Wine Directly Out Of State

By Christine Edwards

Long Islanders have been lucky when it comes to local wines. They are privileged enough not only to be in close vicinity to a number of fine wineries, but also are able to purchase the award-winning wines that many of these vineyards have to offer anytime they want. All it takes to get a bottle of your favorite wine is a simple stop at the vineyard, a telephone call or an online order form. Out-of-state fans of Long Island wineries have not been so lucky. Although able to buy bottles of wine at the time of their vineyard visits on the Island, they have found themselves out of luck when they want to buy more from their home town due to laws prohibiting interstate shipment of wine. Things are going to change, however. A new law will allow New York wines to be shipped outside the state. Wine consumers from all across the country will soon be able to enjoy a glass of Long Island wine about as easily as those of us here on the East End, which is great news for the business of Long Island winemakers.

After a lengthy campaign to legalize interstate shipment of wine, wine producers and consumers received a huge victory as state legislators approved a bill allowing the practice on June 23. This bill comes on the heels of a Supreme Court decision that declared laws regulating wine in 24 states unconstitutional because of different standards for in-state and out-of-state products. In the majority opinion, which was supported by five justices, Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote, "If a state chooses to allow direct shipments of wine it must do so on evenhanded terms." Lawmakers in the 24 states, including New York, can interpret the ruling in two ways. Either they can ban wine shipments altogether, or allow wines from all vineyards, regardless of where they are located. Much to the delight of New York wine connoisseurs, especially those on the North Fork, legislators in Albany chose the latter. Steven Bate, executive director of the Long Island Wine Council, said, "There were two paths the state could have taken on this issue to comply with the Supreme Court decision. The path chosen last week to allow interstate direct shipment will instead give our wineries access to significant new markets across the country with important implications for their financial viability and capacity to contribute to the local and state economy."

The effort to pass the bill was a 15-year process, and many rallied to the cause. At the head of the movement were Julie Suarez of the New York Farm Bureau, Allison Lee of Patricia Lynch Associates, Pete Saltonstall of King Ferry Winery and John Martini of Anthony Road Wine Company. Suarez and Lee were tireless as they confronted legislators in the Capitol and Legislative Office Building, while Martini and Saltonstall worked to raise money and garner support from other wineries. One of the most memorable moments of the campaign occurred on June 8, when dozens of supporters stormed Albany, and visited 212 legislative offices. Although it is a state issue, federal legislators including Senator Hillary Clinton, Congresswoman Louise Slaughter and Congressman Tim Bishop were supportive of the bill, and used their influence to help things along. The New York Times and The Wall Street Journal, among other newspapers ran editorials discussing the benefits of allowing interstate wine shipment. Also pivotal in the bill's passing was the discrediting of the arguments used by its critics. The Federal Trade Commission published a 139-page report on the direct shipment issue, and found no evidence of underage access and tax evasions. Christian Baiz, owner of The Old Field Vineyards in Southold and acting president of the Long Island Wine Council, expressed his appreciation for the bill's advocates. "Legions of people who have worked on the direct shipment of wine to consumers deserve our gratitude and congratulations on the passage of this industry precedent-setting legislation. The Long Island wine industry is a clear beneficiary of this hard work and will be able to attain national recognition for its highly sought after quality wines."

The bill allows New York wineries to directly ship up to 36 cases, or 432 bottles, of wine per year to adult consumers in New York and in states that allow such shipments. It allows wine shipments from outside of New York and has provisions to prevent underage access and tax evasion, including license requirements. The new regulations will have a tremendous impact on Long Island wineries. In terms of economics, the market for Long Island wines will expand tremendously. Many wineries here have long lists of customers from out-of-state eager to make purchases without making the visit. Other wineries have more of a local fan base, and it will take some time before the economic benefits are fully reaped by them. Bob Kern, the general manager of Martha Clara Vineyards, indicate that his vineyard will definitely benefit from interstate shipment, but that it will take about two or three years. He attributes this to the fact that most customers are from the Long Island area.

But to many wineries, the best part about the new law is the recognition that Long Island vineyards will be able to gain

But to many wineries, the best part about the new law is the recognition that Long Island vineyards will be able to gain now that their wines are widely accessible. Roman Roth, winemaker and general manager of Wolffer Estate, said the law is "definitely changing the picture of how Long Island wines are perceived." Previously, journalists often shied away from writing about New York wines because their readers had no way of getting them. Likewise, many of Long Island's award winning wines will finally become available to wine lovers across the country. "Our wines do exceptionally well in competitions and blind tastings against large and legendary producers from around the world," Bate said. "We're eager for individual consumers both here and around the country to be able to compare for themselves." A final key benefit is that in the wine industry, New York will now transform from a regional player to a national one. "It becomes a national brand now," Roth said. "Economically, reputation wise and image wise, it's a big boost."

A Tale of Two Merlots

Merlot is often touted as Long Island's "signature" grape — the varietal and the wine that is going to put the region on the world wine stage. I'm not one hundred percent sold on that notion — some of the Cabernet Franc here is just too good — but the consistency and ripe-ability of Merlot makes it somewhat of a safer choice.

At Le Close Therese in Aquebogue, owner and winemaker Theresa Dilworth, makes two interesting and decidedly different Merlots with good results. These wines, along with her Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay and Rose are produced at Premium Wine Group, the custom-crush winemaking facility in Mattituck. In my experience, Dilworth always shows a deft hand and desire to make truly hand-crafted wines.

Her recently released Comtesse Therese 2003 Hungarian Oak Merlot ($16.50) spent 14 months in Hungarian and French oak (mostly Hungarian) and begs to be enjoyed with food. Ruby red in the glass, it has an aromatic nose of black cherries, raspberries, black pepper and smoky burnt sugar. Soft and spicy, with gentle tannins and a little acidity, its smoky and peppery-sweet berry flavors accented by almost floral notes make this a great wine for with burgers, BBQ chicken and even pepperoni pizza. Only 130 cases were made, so make sure you pick some up for your Labor Day BBQ.

Dilworth's Comtesse Therese 2002 Traditional Merlot ($18) is a wine of a totally different color — both literally and figuratively. Much darker in the glass, the differences brought about by four extra months in mostly French oak (with a little American thrown in) are obvious. The nose is less peppery, but still fruit-driven with blackberries and cherries dominating. On the palate, it's denser and more substantial with more, fuller tannins framing its berry flavors. The finish, while long, offers some still-raw oak character that will likely fade with more aging. Drink this red with more substantial red meats, like steak, lamb or venison. 188 cases were made.

I've long been a fan of Dilworth's rose, because she always avoids the overuse of sulphur dioxide in the winemaking process, leading to a wine lush with fruit flavor. The Comtesse Therese 2004 Rose ($14) continues this tradition. While many roses are bright, Kool-Aid pink, this one is an appealing salmony orange color. The nose is light and straightforward, with lime and strawberry aromas. The first sip is a little tight (this is a young wine) but with time it opens up nicely revealing strawberry, apricot and cherry soda flavors. The acidity is lively but not abrasive, resulting in a well-balanced summer sipper. I think you can drink good rose with most any food, and this certainly qualifies. 150 cases were made.

The Tasting Room, in Jamesport and in Peconic, carry these and other Comtesse Therese wines. Visit www.tasting-room.com for more information.

For more information about Le Close Therese and Comtesse Therese wines, visit www.lctwinery.com or call 871-9194. Dilworth also plans to open a small French bistro in Aquebogue. The menu will feature Long Island wines, locally grown produce, New York State cheese and even Long Island-brewed beers. She's hoping to open sometime in 2006.

The Shady Lady Inn

305 North Road
Greenport
477-4500

When this beautiful inn closed its doors last year after the very untimely death of Bobbie Zorn, who started the Shady Lady Inn, many wondered what its future would be or indeed if it had a future. Thankfully, it reopened on Memorial Day in a different incarnation as far as its menu is concerned, but still with the majority of its décor unchanged.

The Shady Lady is now an upscale steakhouse and private cigar club. Chef Ross Essner has also returned to be in charge of the kitchen. Jeff Lange is the general manager, coming to the position after a long career in catering across the Island, and Samantha Staples is the assistant general manager and has been at the Shady Lady from its original opening. They explained that the Cigar Club has a membership fee of $25 for six months and members have the use of the very relaxing Salon, where shortly a new humidor will be installed.

Dinner is served either in the formal Scarlet dining room where jackets are preferred for male guests, or in the less formal Pine Lounge where there is also a magnificent bar for pre or post-dinner drinks. The same menu is available in both locations.

We ordered just a couple of appetizers but Ross was having none of that and insisted on sending out a succession of tasting dishes and we were certainly glad that he did. The menu may have changed, but the quality of his cooking still is of the highest level. Calamari was tender with a very light batter and a very interesting Asian styled dipping sauce, a pleasant change from the traditional tomato based sauces. A totally different tuna tartar kept the intrinsic, wonderfully fresh taste of the tuna and lifted it to a new level with the accompanying wasabi caviar. One interesting thing about the menu is its brevity. The already well-trained wait staff readily supplies explanation of the dishes. I am not sure that "Philly cheese steak cigars" would have tempted me without their explanation, but they really turned out to be very, very good as was a lobster roll comprising generous pieces of lobster in a light dressing served on a pastry base.

The menu has a good raw bar selection, and I knew from previous experience that Ross is extremely selective when it comes to choosing oysters. The Kumumoto from Washington State were exceptional, like a fine wine with the combination of appearance, texture and length of taste. I cannot recall eating finer oysters anywhere.

Another interesting item on the menu is one simply billed as "the wedge." Ross takes a large wedge of iceberg lettuce and blends pieces of crisp bacon and blue cheese in a light dressing. This creates a wonderful palate-cleansing and refreshing salad. Finally in this parade of delicacies came some exquisite, enormous tempura shrimp with perfectly crisp light tempura batter and a mignonette sauce that was a perfect complement.

With these appetizers we chose two wines available by the glass, a Santa Margarita Pinot Grigio and a local Macari 2003 Chardonnay. The wine list is interesting, extensive and sensibly priced from about $25 a bottle and up. (All the way to $1800 for a liter of Caymus 1985 Special Selection Cabernet Sauvignon, if your tastes and pockets so desire.)

The main part of the menu of course revolves around meat, although Ross will always meet the requests of vegitarians, especially if given due notice when reservations are made.

There is every cut of steak you could wish for and we took the advice of Dan and Tom, our servers, and tried the New York strip which came sizzling hot, prepared exactly as requested and which showed again the difference between standard meat and this specially selected quality meat. The double cut Colorado lamb chops also were everything we hoped for and the sides are all great additions to the meal. It just depends on whether your tastes are for sautéed spinach, button mushrooms, a twice-baked Vidalia onion, or great crisp onion rings. The fries, it almost goes without saying, are large, hand-cut and perfectly addictive.

Thanks to Ross not insisting that we had to clear our plates, we thankfully did have a little room left to sample a couple of desserts. Baked Alaska, so often a vital part of the last night dinner on a cruise, here came non-flamed but very tasty with a garnish of fresh berries and a nursery dish of bread pudding was taken to a new and sophisticated level.

As we sipped an excellent espresso we both agreed that it really is great that the Shady Lady is back in town and in its new role as a high quality steak house. It really does fill an otherwise unfulfilled niche in Greenport's dining spectrum.

The Shady Lady is open for dinner from 5:00 p.m. Appetizers range from $7 to $16 and main courses from $21 to $84 for a 44 oz porterhouse for two.

The Washwick Agency

Health Insurance Made Affordable

What happens when 2,000 self-employed business men and women, freelance artists, writers and other sole proprietors are brought together? They get group insurance rates that are far more affordable than they could ever get on their own, thanks to The Washwick Agency.

"Due to New York insurance laws, sole proprietors do not have the same access to affordably-priced medical and dental insurance as larger businesses," explained Karl Washwick, president of the Riverhead, Long Island-based agency. Many independent contractors, freelancers, and small businesses and their employees find insurance costs so exorbitant, that insurance expenses drain an excessive portion of their bottom line or, more frequently, they go without coverage all together.

With medical expenses soaring, people are taking high risks operating in business without proper insurance coverage. Many feel they have no choice.

"I am a small business so I understand the problems of small businesses," said Washwick, who founded the agency 25 years ago to meet the medical and dental insurance needs of an underserved, but significant population.

The Washwick Agency formed and acts as administrator of the Peconic Bay Business Association. By joining the association, the self -employed and their employees are eligible for group rate plans. Although based at the eastern tip of Long Island, the Peconic Bay Business Association provides its services to people working or residing in all of Long Island and all five boroughs of New York City.

By specializing in medical and dental insurance, Washwick feels his agency's efforts to get clients the best possible rates should stay undiluted." I don't do car insurance," Washwick laughed.

The Washwick Agency works closely with each client to best understand his or her insurance needs, and then helps choose the best of many available plans for that client. Each plan can offer a variety of baffling choices, such as HMOs, In-and-Out-of-Network plans and options for hospitalization and prescription co-pays, vision plans, and dependent child coverage. The Washwick Agency helps cut through the confusion. "I'll tell you the plans that are available, and the pros and cons of each," Washwick said.

The Washwick Agency also offers such "business solutions" as oversight of employee benefit plans and retirement savings plans.

The agency's mission is to provide clients with the best possible plan at the lowest possible cost. They promise to listen to your needs, sort through the maze of products and services available and help you choose what is most appropriate for you.

The Washwick Agency's is located at 860 East Main Street in Riverhead, New York. For more information on their services call 369-0888 or visit their website at www.Washwick.com.

Old, Abandoned Theatre To Be Reborn

Suffolk Theatre Rennovations Are Finally Underway

By R.B. Stuart

Bob Castaldi has proposed a plan to refurbish one of downtown's neglected landmarks: The Suffolk Theatre. Long ago forgotten, this Art Deco gem of 1930s Hollywood movie house saw its last patrons 18 years ago. It closed in 1987 because fewer tickets were selling as a result of the Cineplex's. The doors were shut after 54 years of entertainment. Locked away in time, the memories of yesteryear, the once glorious moving picture house, was reduced to a pile of dust, cobwebs and darkness.

The light has come back in however. The bearer of the rescue was Castle Renovations' Bob Castaldi and the newly formed non-profit Suffolk Performing Arts Society. He purchased the now defunct Deco dream in February from the town and is currently working with Rob Dippel, executive director of the non-profit organization to build the stage and open it as a performing arts center. Dippel has 28 years of experience in non-profit arts management and 17 years in historic theatres. With this team of specialists helping to carry the torch, a new day is dawning for downtown Riverhead, and the theater will be magnificent once again.

Castaldi's plans for a grand reopening of the theatre in 2006 for the primary season of April to October. "It will undoubtedly have a huge impact to the district," Rob Dippel said.

"Historically, culturally, economically and educationally. It's about critical mass. That's what they need here 'feet on the street,'" he stated.

The Suffolk Theatre is one of the last Art Deco theatres on Long Island. "It's important for the community. The investment will be well worth it for the cultural impact on the community. It will be an economic anchor for the downtown business district," Dippel said.

Education is an important component of the overall mission. "We will be busing in kids from area school districts for children's productions. And we will be working closely with the schools in selecting the programming so that it supports and enhances the curriculum."

The Riverhead East End Arts Council will be working with them on a lot of educational programs.

Besides children's programming, their programming plan is to bring professional touring productions of comedy, country, blues, rock, jazz, dance productions, Broadway shows, and film programming. The new designs under development are additional restrooms, administrative offices, concession areas, a bar service area, and a VIP/Corporate suite area in the balcony. This will add nearly 6000 square feet to the stage viewing area with supportive backstage spaces for performers. When complete, the house will seat 700 –750 people.

"We are looking to the community to invest in this, both financially and with their time in volunteering to make this a reality," Dippel said. "We're organizing a naming rights campaign on the face of the building and throughout the theatre." (For those interested in etching their name for posterity, it would make a great gift, too.)

"This is a community project," Dippel added, "It's an East End project and it's where the North and South Fork meet." He continued, "There's no question the resources are here to make this a reality. It's a project that was anxiously awaited for over a decade."

Why now? "There were a number of factors aligning," Dippel explained. "First and foremost Bob Castaldi's investment and commitment to the project. He's had a home in Cutchogue for 20 years and it was a chance for him to give something back. The town was ready to sell it and wanted to sell it, the community was ready, and Bob stepped up. Economically this will change the district's idea on businesses," he said.

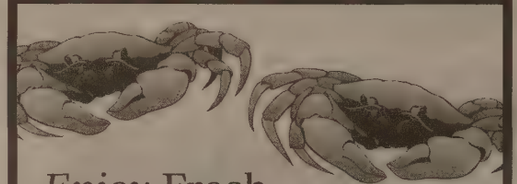

The first open house on Memorial Day weekend brought in a constant stream of people. Some were signing up to volunteer, others were signing up for the mailing list. People told stories of when the movie tickets were 17 cents and how they used to park their bicycle on the sidewalk without a lock. "There are a lot of memories here, a place where community came together. Those you don't walk away from and tear the building down. You compromise and find a way while serving today's audience," Dippel concluded.

This landmark is expected to bring hundreds maybe thousands, of people to see a show and get a peek at the old movie house's charm and luxury. It will bring theatergoers back to a time when chandeliers, wall sconces, marble water fountains and velvet powder room chairs were the norm.

This team is passionate and committed to bringing the glory back to the Suffolk Theatre, by bringing the people and joy back into its walls so it can shine once again. If you'd like a to take a look at the past, they welcome you to come to their second open house on Saturday, July 9 at 12 p.m. – 9 p.m. and on Sunday, July 10 from 12 p.m. – 5 p.m. If you want to get involved or have further questions, please call Rob Dippel at 208-0003 or visit their web site www.suffolktheatre.com

The Penguin's Find A Home At Atlantis Marine World

Atlantis Marine World Celebrates the Opening of thier New Penguin Exhibit

By Kelly Krieger

This past Friday, I had the pleasure of attending the opening reception for Atlantis Marine World's Penguin debut. Upon my arrival I was given a black bowtie to wear and was escorted to the new exhibit. The music was playing and the aquarium was filled with families and supporters of this wonderful addition.

The Penguin Pavilion "Encounter" brings visitors up close and personal with 14 African Penguins. Their new home cost $800,000 to complete. These waddling friends will live in a luxurious 800-square-foot space with a lovely pool for skinny-dipping.

Visitors will be afforded the opportunity to get even closer through a pop-up window called the "Bird's Eye-to-Eye View." In addition, the entire exhibit is lined with windows. The penguins are still adjusting to their new environment, but seem to be extremely happy.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service contacted Atlantis Marine World in April 2004 as a potential home for the 14 African Penguins after they were confiscated from someone who imported them illegally into the United States. Within several days, the Atlantis Marine World made room and accommodated these adorable creatures and in January of this year began construction of the new exhibit.

Penguins can live up to 15 years and enjoy a diet comprised of anchovies, mackerel and herring. They can swim as fast as 15 mph when hunting for food. African Penguins are in grave danger of becoming extinct, with just over 179,000 remaining in the world. The decline of their species is a result of predators, such as, feral cats who have wiped out many of their nesting spots.

African Penguins are content living in mild temperatures. They usually live on offshore islands or on beaches. These cute little penguins stay cool swimming in offshore waters and resting in shaded areas. They also make strange mating sounds that are similar to that of a donkey.

Atlantis Marine World is a place on Long Island like no other. They have provided endless hours of entertainment and education for children and the community. Founders Jim Bissett, Joe Petrocelli, Joseph Yaiullo (curator), Exhibits Manager Eli J. Fishman and Construction Manager Tom Alaimo worked closely to make the Penguin Encounter a state-of-the-art facility by recreating the penguins natural environment.

Every exhibit at Atlantis Marine World shares the same qualit, from the Harbor Seal Exhibit where guests will enjoy entertaining shows with these adorable creatures to the Lost City of Atlantis Shark Exhibit.

The 120,000-gallon shark tank exhibit is definitely a highlight at the aquarium. Inside this lost city, you will discover several types of sharks, giant Moray eels and several other fascinating underwater creatures. There is also a Sand Shark Lagoon, a ray pool (where you can feed and touch these friendly critters) and other touch tanks where kids can touch and feel an assortment of horseshoe crabs, hermit crabs, clams and starfish.

Check out the Piranha, shipwreck, rocky shores, and Amazon Rainforest exhibits. Each displays a unique setting that recreates the natural habitat of these amazing friends of the sea. One of the most colorful and beautiful exhibits is the "Live Coral Reef" which displays an array of vibrant and unique tropical fish from the Caribbean.

Atlantis Marine World is also home to the Riverhead Foundation for Marine Research and Preservation, a not-for-profit organization that rescues and rehabilitates injured sea turtles, seals, dolphins and other sea creatures. This program has been a success because Atlantis Marine World has given the organization a place to care for these animals and educate the public at the same time.

While visiting the aquarium, visitors can learn about the harshness of the environment and how it affects the animals that live in it. The program is funded by donations and grants, but it's the public awareness that helps make it so effective.

In addition to the many exhibits and rehabilitation section located behind the aquarium, there are fun rides and an interactive swimming lagoon. In the aquarium's underwater lagoon, participants can swim among sand sharks, rays and tropical fish. I swam in it last year and had a wonderful time.

Everyone needs a little escape now and again, and Atlantis Marine World brings to Long Island what Disney brings to Florida and California, –endless hours of fun, entertainment and education!

For more information on Atlantis Marine World, call 208-9200. The aquarium is located at 431 East Main Street, Riverhead.

Oysters – Great or Gross?

Long Island is honestly extraordinarily beautiful in the summer. From the scenic view from the wharf in Sag Harbor to the breathtaking look at the water and boats at the end of Dune Road, there is nothing quite like it. But we are known for a few industries here, too. Our wineries are spectacular, the fresh food on our farms is delicious and our fishermen are known for finding the best seafood, including oysters.

When I was a child I used to think that every single oyster contained a beautiful pearl. I'd scour the beaches looking for the beautiful oysters that washed up on the shore and attempt with all my might to open them. One time, and only one time, did I find a sand particle slowly being turned into a pearl ..... but it didn't quite get there. Pearls are actually formed in that way; some oysters emit a substance which coats gritty sand that enters their domain and slowly turns it into a pearl. Oysters grow about one inch per year and are usually harvested when they are 3 inches in length. A very interesting oyster fact is that oysters start off as males and end up as females at some point in their lives. Oysters float freely for the first part of their lives and then eventually cement themselves to a rock or a hard surface and never float again. They also can produce 100 million eggs during one breeding season.

Back in the 1930s when the economy was failing in New York and we were in the throes of the Great Depression, newspaper headlines all through the state proclaimed, "Oysters give 20,000 jobs." According to "Oysters, Dutchmen and the Bay" (www.limaritime.org/oystertour1.html), a harvest of 20,000,000 bushels, which would bring in 40 million dollars, was expected in the West Sayville area and many job openings appeared overnight, mostly for "shuckers." Since then, rules and regulations were implemented to protect the oysters and to designate safe consumption for humans.

The Great South Bay on Long Island was home to many oysters and the site of a multitude of harvests. The Bay provided 75 percent of clams consumed around the country and biologists discovered 200 species of oysters. As a result, at one time there were over 600 oyster bars in New York.

Today, oysters are still a popular food. The myth that oysters are a natural aphrodisiac is due in part to their high nutritional content. They are high in Vitamin E and Zinc, and low in cholesterol. Oysters are a source of protein, several vitamins, sodium, iron, potassium, calcium, magnesium, iodine and phosphorus.

B. Smith's Restaurant in Sag Harbor serves a variety of popular oyster dishes, including Curried Crisp Oysters served with a Coconut Wasabi Dip, and has a raw bar featuring a variety of local oysters. The Inn at Quogue offers a beautiful raw bar featuring fresh oysters while Ironsides and Indian Cove in Hampton Bays offers you a waterfront view while feasting on a variety of fine oyster dishes.

There are many ways of preparing oyster dishes. You can opt to barbecue, microwave, steam or oven cook. It's essential that you don't overcook oysters. You can check them by tapping on the shell. If you hear a hollow sound, they are ready to eat. You should always place them flat side up to hold in the juices.

When opening your oysters for cooking, make sure that you have the appropriate knife specifically made for oyster opening. A metal knife may leave the taste of the blade on the oyster. Use one with a strong stainless steel blade. Insert the knife between the shells near the hinge, slip the blade underneath and detach the oyster from the shell. Try to keep the oyster in its natural juices.

Here is a great recipe from Silver Point Oysters on how to prepare a delicious and light oyster dish.

Oyster and Pasta Salad
1/2 lb. (spiral) pasta, tri-colored is optional
1 Pint of oysters
2 ribs of celery and leaves
1/2 cup sliced, black olives
1 red pepper
1 green pepper
1 hot yellow pepper
Dressing of your choice,
Parsley, onion (optional)

Cook pasta, drain and cool. Poach oysters, drain and cool. If large oysters are used, cut into bite-size pieces after they are firmed. Slice olives and dice celery and peppers. In medium bowl, combine all ingredients. Add dressing of your choice and toss lightly.

We as Long Islanders have so much to be grateful for; our fine atmosphere, wines and of course, oysters.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

The current bounty at farmer's markets, specialty markets and farm stands is inspiration enough to prepare the easy foods of summer. It's summertime, and what could be simpler than salads?

When I spotted homegrown romaine lettuce on a market stand I immediately thought, "Okay, Caesar salad for dinner." My mouth watered thinking of the dressing I would prepare with garlicky croutons, anchovies and freshly grated Parmesan, extra-virgin olive oil and freshly squeezed lemon. Combining the dressing with the tender yet crisp romaine leaves made a spectacular and satisfying salad. I love to roast beets to put into salads and pick them up weekly at my local organic market. Roasting brings out the sweetness of this delectable vegetable and, best of all, the cooked beets can stay in the refrigerator for a week or so to use whenever you are ready. And when the leafy beet greens are very fresh you can add them to a salad as well.

The peppery greens of arugula are always welcome in a salad. Here the lettuce pairs well with braised onions in balsamic vinaigrette, contrasting the sweetness of the onions with shavings of the classic Pecorino Romano, a delicious cheese with a sharp edge. How simple it is to satisfy your salad cravings with the season's offerings.

CAESAR SALAD

Use only the best of everything for this classic salad from the freshest romaine lettuce to the piquant Parmigiano Reggiano.

Serves 4-6

1 fresh head Romaine lettuce
1-2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
4-6 tinned anchovies, drained
1 cup croutons, preferably home-made*
1 3-minute cooked egg
2 tablespoons lemon juice, red wine or balsamic vinegar
5-6 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
Shaved Parmigiano Reggiano

1. Discard any bruised outer leaves. Cut away and discard heavy white membrane at base of leaves where necessary.

2. Wash and spin dry lettuce in a salad spinner, then carefully roll up in paper towel to absorb excess moisture. Can be done ahead to this point. Place in a ziploc bag and refrigerate for several hours or overnight. Bring greens to room temperature if refrigerated.

3. Place egg in a small saucepan of cold water. Bring to the edge of a boil, then simmer for 3 minutes. Remove with slotted spoon, cool under running water and shell.

4. Place finely chopped garlic in bottom of a large salad bowl. With fork mash anchovies into the garlic, then cut egg into the anchovy garlic mixture. Add croutons and lemon juice or wine vinegar and stir to mix. Season the mixture with salt and pepper to taste, then gradually whisk in olive oil, one tablespoon at a time.

5. Just before serving, place the greens over the dressing and carefully lift the greens, with a folding motion, until leaves are well coated with the dressing. Divide evenly onto 4-6 salad plates and shave the Parmigiano over the greens. Serve at once.

*Croutons: Cut about 1/3 loaf of crusty French or Italian bread into 1/4 –inch cubes. Toss the cubes in a bit of olive oil to coat and bake in a preheated 375 degree oven for 6-8 minutes. Cool and use in salads. Can be made ahead in larger batches. Put into a waxed paper lined tin and store in a dry cool place. The croutons will keep for weeks.

ARUGULA SALAD AND BRAISED ONIONS WITH PECORINO CHEESE SHAVINGS

The onions are slowly poached in oil, drained and served as a base for the peppery greens under a mantle of cheese shavings.

Serves 6-8

For the salad

3-4 Vidalia or Spanish onions
Extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
2 garlic cloves, thinly sliced
2-3 bunches of arugula, long stems removed, washed and spin-dried

For the vinaigrette

1 tablespoon balsamic vinegar
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
Solid piece of Pecorino cheese

1. Peel and halve the onions. Place the onions on a board cut side down and slice very thin or slice in a food processor with the thin slicing blade in place.

2. Put onions in a heavy skillet and pour over enough oil to barely cover them. Season with salt and pepper and simmer over medium-low heat until transparent, about 20 minutes. Add sliced garlic and cook just until the garlic begins to brown. Remove from heat and let cool to room temperature. Can be prepared up to several hours ahead to this point.

3. Remove long stems from arugula then wash and spin-dry the leaves in a salad-spinner. Spread arugula on paper towels and gently roll up to absorb excess moisture. Can be done ahead and refrigerated in a plastic bag. Bring to room temperature before using.

4. For the vinaigrette: Place vinegar and Dijon mustard in a small mixing bowl. Add salt and pepper to taste. Whisk in the oil until mixture is homogenous.

To serve: Arrange braised onions on a large platter for buffet style or divide equally on 6-8 salad plates. Place the arugula in a large mixing bowl and carefully toss with the vinaigrette to coat the leaves. Arrange greens over the onions. With a cheese shaver, shave slices of Pecorino over top of the greens and serve.

East by Northeast has announced their new executive chef, Doron Wong. Wong's culinary experience spans both national and international. He graduated with a degree in Culinary Arts from Newbury College in MA. The early years of his career found him at top restaurants such as Maison Robert in Boston, Park Avenue Café in New York and Clio Restaurant in Boston. Internationally, he has spent time in Asia as sous chef at Star's of San Francisco in Singapore and chef de cuisine at House of Mao II, also in Singapore. In 1999, he returned to the States to work at Seven Restaurant and Bar in New York. Wong has also worked with the Smith & Wollensky Restaurant Group on developing a cookbook with chef David Burke. In 2002, he took a position at the famed Plaza Hotel in New York. In 2003, Wong went international again without leaving the States, at the United Nations Delegates dining room. Wong is now heading the kitchen at East by Northeast in Montauk, integrating his international culinary experience with the bold and flavorful menu focusing on pan-Asian dishes. Dining in the Hamptons

Feeling Crabby

In general, going out to eat has the great potential of becoming a social outing and not just a quest for sustenance. It can become transformed by the place wherein you choose to dine, with whom you are dining, and on what you are dining.

What you eat for any meal is a conversational powder keg waiting to burst. With topics ranging from the color and presentation of the food, to its taste and nutrition, and even what wine to pair with your meal, dinner could turn into a several hour-long conversation. But what if your meal has a history of its own? What if your meal once used to live, breathe, and possibly even mate once or twice before it found itself on your plate? Can you use this as a conversation piece or is that a dining faux pas? I say use your meal to your advantage. You're already about to eat it, may as well get to know it a little bit first. That said, let us now delve into the sometimes rigid, sometimes supple world of the softshell crab.

Their broad, semitriangular shell and five pairs of appendages, or pereiopods, generally characterize these crustaceans. The first two of the appendages bear large claws and the back two are flattened paddles modified for swimming. Crabs can be found in two varieties, hard or soft-shelled; both are culinary delights to many. In fact, several million pounds of crab are commercially fished through trapping or trawling every year.

When found and served as the hard-shell variety, the crab is in its intermolt stage and the exoskeleton, or shell, is fully hardened. In the soft-shell stage, however, the crab is in a phase just after molting but the skeleton has not yet hardened. This is when we would ideally find the crab on our plates.

Molting, a word I used to associate only with birds and with my finding their feathers throughout my yard, is actually the growing up process for crabs. They must shed their old shells and form larger ones in its place. Similar to humans, the growing process happens quickly at first, and then decelerates throughout the crab's lifespan. By age two, the crab will have likely molted about twelve times and subsequently will molt about once a year through age six.

Just before molting, the crab will have formed a basic form of a new shell underneath its old shell. During this formation, calcium is absorbed from the old shell, rendering it more and more flexible. The old shell then splits at the back of the crab and it backs out of its old skeleton, thereby having officially "molted." This is when the soft-shell crab is extremely vulnerable to damage and predators, and will generally spend the next few days hiding or buried in sediment. It is now that the new shell expands and begins to harden. For the next two to three months, the shell will continue to harden while muscle tissue builds in the entire body. It is also during these months that the crab will continue to be paranoid as local and commercial fishers look to nab him or her for soft-shell dining delights.

As is generally the case with meat and seafood, soft-shell crabs are a controversial culinary treat. Whereas prime hard-shell crabs will yield 25 percent of their weight in meat, soft-shell crabs only yield at best 20 percent. Therefore, harvesting crabs when they are hard-shelled maximizes the yield per crab caught. Also, the meat from a soft-shell crab is of lower quality than that of its hard-shelled counterpart. The watery, mushy, jelly-like meat is often thrown away, or wasted, thus creating a controversy.

Should this issue not faze you, and you would like to go on enjoying the crustacean delights, let me quell just one more potential fear, so that you may rest, and dine, easy. It has been rumored that crabs, especially females, have certain parts that are poisonous and should be removed prior to eating. This is an old wives' tale; crabs are not poisonous at all. Some crab parts, such as the gills, do not taste as good as others, and should be cleaned or discarded, but eating them will not hurt you.

So wherever your dining experiences may find you this summer, let these details regale your companions as you divulge yourself in a soft-shelled, crabby, delight.

Poppable Perfection

From the 99-cent pack you can pop into the microwave, to the $25 1-gallon tins offered by The Hampton Popcorn Company, popcorn comes in a variety of styles and flavors, and with Americans consuming over one billion pounds of popcorn a year, it is not only one of today's longest standing snacks, but also one of the most popular.

The oldest ears of popcorn were discovered in the Bat Cave of west central New Mexico in 1948. Ranging from smaller than a penny to about 2 inches in size, the oldest Bat Cave ears are about 4,000 years old. Popcorn is a special variety of dried corn that pops open and puffs up when heated. This transformation occurs because of a high amount of natural moisture trapped inside the hull. Heating the corn creates immense pressure, which bursts open the hull, turning the kernel inside-out.

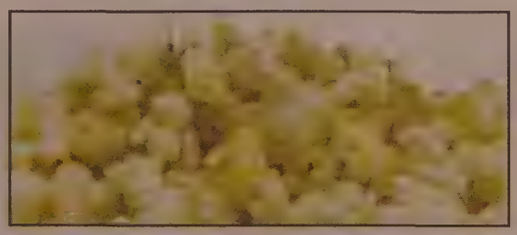

Unpopped popcorn can be stored at room temperature for about a year, but retains its natural moisture (which means it will produce larger popped kernels) better if stored airtight in the refrigerator or freezer. Popcorn packaged with oil in its own "pan" should be stored no longer than about 3 months at room temperature. One cup of plain popcorn equals about 30 calories, and 1 cup buttered popcorn equals 90 to 120 calories, depending on the amount of butter.

Popcorn was very popular from the 1890s up until the Great Depression. Street vendors used to follow crowds around, pushing steam or gas-powered poppers through fairs, parks and expositions. During the Depression, popcorn, at 5 cents a bag, was one of the few luxuries down-and-out families could afford.

Furthermore, during World War II, sugar was sent overseas for U.S. troops, which meant there wasn't much sugar left in the States to make candy. Thus, Americans ate three times as much popcorn. Nevertheless, popcorn went into a slump in the early 1950s when television became popular. Attendance at movie theaters dropped, and with it so did popcorn consumption. When the public began eating popcorn at home, the new relationship between television and popcorn led to a resurgence in popularity. Microwave popcorn accounted for $240 million in annual U.S. popcorn sales in the 1990s.

World-renowned chocolatier Jacques Torres, who just recently opened a second outpost of his thriving Brooklyn chocolate shop in Manhattan (Jacques Torres Chocolate Haven 350 Hudson at King Street, 212-414-2462), has a great recipe for Chocolate Caramel Popcorn. 1 cup popcorn, 1 cup and 2 tablespoons sugar, 1/2 cup and 2 tablespoons corn syrup, 1/4 cup water, and 1 pound bittersweet chocolate, are all you'll need to make this tasty treat, which is great for snacking on while lounging by your pool or on the beach.

First, pop the popcorn. To make the caramel, place the sugar, corn syrup, and water in a 2-quart heavy-bottomed saucepan over medium-high heat and cook until it's a light golden brown. A large pan should be used so that there will be room to add the popcorn. Use a wooden spoon to stir the popcorn into the caramel until it is evenly coated. Pour the caramelized popcorn onto a parchment paper lined baking sheet and allow it to cool. When cool, use your hands to break up any clumps. Afterwards, place the cool popcorn in a large bowl. Use a ladle to drizzle the chocolate over the popcorn, stirring with a wooden spoon as you go. Keep adding chocolate until the popcorn is evenly coated. Pour the chocolate-coated popcorn onto a parchment paper lined baking sheet and allow it to cool. The whole process should take around half an hour and should give you about 4 cups of popped corn. On a side note, it's important to remember to be careful when working with the caramel, because it gets very hot.

If you're not quite ready to make your own popcorn, The Hampton Popcorn Company (hamptonpopcorn.com, 212-570-9555) sells everything from Kettle Corn to White Chocolate Peanut Butter Popcorn. Packaged in simple white and blue tins, they make great snacks, as well as nice gifts.

For those not looking to spend as much money, Act II is widely regarded as the best all-around microwave popcorn, and for those who are concerned with calories, there are Mini Bags of Butter-Flavored Popcorn. For the more professional popcorn connoisseurs, popcornpopper.com offers popcorn poppers starting at $25, and going up to as much as $2000. Either way, the summer is a great time to indulge in this delightful treat!

Pierre's Patisserie

What did I miss the most when I moved from Manhattan to East Hampton? Believe it or not, it was the tiny French bakery across the street from my apartment. When I left my building, the aroma of warm, buttery croissants was wafting through the air. I stopped in almost every day. It was my morning ritual, my rainy day romance, my hard day's reward and my lonely afternoon's solace. I gave up all that comfort and all of those worthy calories for my place in the sun.

But now, along with everyone else who lives or vacations in the Hamptons, I can once again know the joy of the patisserie. Pierre Weber, owner of Pierre's Restaurant in Bridgehampton and a fifth generation pastry chef, has begun to serve "Petit Dejeuner Parisien," and the experience is even better than in New York. Because in Pierre's words, "It is jolie, like in Paris."

Originally from Obernai in the Alsace region in France, he is the first of his family to set up shop in the United States, having moved to New York in 1983. He came to run the New York Marathon, and stayed. After selling pastries wholesale for eighteen years, Pierre moved to the Hamptons, and has been living in Bridgehampton for five years.

Using his family recipes, Pierre has created a morning menu that is at once indulgent and light. Brioche, croissant chocolate croissant, an cheese Danish are just a fe of the treats served warm from the oven, beginning at a.m and all throughout th day.

"I wanted it to be ver relaxed and casual, no service no bother." By that, he mean that you order your pastry a the counter, serve yourself co fee in a double-handled latt bowl (hot milk will come fro the kitchen if you want to mi yourself a latte), and hel yourself to a small dish o jam. Together on charming painted trays import ed from Alsace, you bring your petit dejeuner t either a table or a wicker bench outside, and begi your leisurely linger, which can last a few minute or all day.

When you must finally, regretfully depart, yo can choose among dozens of desserts and treats t take home with you. The luscious apple tatin, th extravagant millefeuille aux fraises (strawberry mousseline and puff pastry), the crunchy palmie cookies (elephant ears) are a few of the mouth watering selections.

For a full petit dejeuner menu or a list of tarte and cakes, check out Pierre's website, a www.pierresbridgehampton.com. Pierre's patis serie is located within his restaurant at 246 Main Street. Call 631-537-5110.

NEW KIDS ON THE BLOCK

GALERIE BEL AGE – WESTHAMPTON BEACH

On May 29, Galerie Bel Age premiered as one of the most diverse new galleries on Long Island. Their Investment Art Program is the basis of Galerie BelAge's retinue of artists, with beautiful works by artists like Dali, Degas, Erte, Icart, Peter Max, Cezanne, Calder, etc. In conjunction with Galerie BelAge's Investment Art Program is their in-house assistance by Ben Johnson III, curator and gallery manager. Mr. Johnson can assist in the creation of a portfolio of artists that will help clientele hedge against inflation. In addition are the beautiful works by the number one selling artist in the USA, Pino. Many of his works are appreciating at over one hundred and fifty percent per year. Mr. Johnson can also offer any artist's work as a personal fine art broker, providing any art you desire, and deliver the artwork to your estate or any address in the world. Galerie BelAge provides an exclusive In Home Art program, in which the gallery brings a host of magnificent artwork directly to a client's home for personal examination. Simply pick which artwork glorifies your home. Also available are site specific urns of important size that create a dramatic statement to a client's entry way, gated entrance or driveway. The urns are filled with beautiful live plantings that are maintained by the staff.

Galerie Bel Age is located at Moniebogue Manor, 8 Moniebogue Lane, Westhampton Beach. For an appointment or to request a private showing call 288-5082.

FRESH-DIRECT – MANHATTAN TO THE HAMPTONS – RIVERHEAD

As Manhattan descends on the Hamptons for the summer season, FreshDirect, an online fresh-food manufacturing and delivery service, will be following suit by expanding home delivery to Hamptons residents and vacationers. Open Memorial Day weekend, just in time for the summer season, BBQs and celebrations. The service will continue throughout the season until Labor Day. Home delivery service will be available for residents and vacationers in East Hampton, Amagansett, Southampton, Bridgehampton, Westhampton, Sag Harbor, Hampton Bays and select surrounding areas. In addition, a convenient drive-thru pickup location in Riverhead will be open on Fridays from 2 to 9 p.m. and on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Home delivery windows are scheduled in two-hour blocks between the hours of noon to 8 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. Delivery is available on Friday from 2 to 10 p.m. and on Saturday from 9 to 5 p.m. Clients can take advantage of quality fresh-food items at reduced prices, delivered direct to your door. In addition, FreshDirect will be sponsoring this year's Blue Moon Ball event, a benefit for EECO Farm in East Hampton, hosted by Christie Brinkley, her husband Peter Cook, and other environmentally-geared celebrities. FreshDirect will be providing fresh-food for this exclusive Hamptons event that is to be held on July 30th.

FreshDirect/Riverhead drive-thru/pick-up location is at 1309 Old Country Road (Route 58), Riverhead. You can call the main number for inquiries at 1-866-283-7374 or check out www.freshdirect.com

PAMELA WILLIAMS GALLERY – AMAGANSETT

After ten years as the director of the now closed Lizan Tops Gallery in East Hampton, Pamela Williams has just opened her new gallery in Amagansett. Working with artists seemed such a natural experience for her since she opened the gallery with a group show. The gallery is a very straight-forward space with high ceilings and wonderful natural light. Enjoying curating the exhibitions and installing the shows, she is sharing her excitement about these artists with the viewers. Among the artists represented are: Derek Buckner, Ralph Carpentier, Dan Christensen, Alyson Denny, Connie Fox, Melora Griffis, Scott Kelley, Cynthia Knott, William King, Paton Miller, Denise Regan and Ken Robbins. The current exhibition is sculpture by the amazing William King through July 10. On July 16, Connie Fox's new paintings will be on display. Pamela Williams Gallery is located at 167 Main Street in Amagansett 267-7817.

From The Runway By Kelly Krieger

Shopping too Much?

I'm one of the fastest shoppers you'll ever meet. Challenge me to dress someone in ten minutes and I'm all over it. I enjoy assisting friends with their outfits as well. However, when I'm shopping for myself, I prefer to do it alone.

I don't like to have any distractions. And for me, many of my friends are distractions (with very few exceptions). I feel the pressure not to buy. I've always loved clothing and from time to time, I admit, I get a bit out of control. Since I've moved back into the life of "single-hood," shopping has been one of my "growing" passions. However, when the bills come in or the balance in my checking account gets lower and lower, that passion becomes short-lived.

Let's rewind to this past weekend. I was invited to a party I wasn't sure I wanted to attend. I must have something to wear I thought, but instead, there I was at 6 p.m. strolling the streets of Southampton (the party started at 7). I hit all my usual spots and quickly scanned the racks. There was nothing that caught my attention. Finally, I ran into a boutique I had never been in before and picked several things to try on. I loved one item, but didn't love the price tag. Without further hesitation and in little time (now nearly 6:30 p.m.), I purchased it. I made it home in time to change and was "fashionably" late, arriving to the festivities by ten minutes before eight.

As I looked around, I realized that not everyone was dressed up and I definitely could have worn something I had in my closet. I know I'm not the only woman in the world who does this, but I really think it's time to change my ways and make do with what I already have. My collection of clothing is quite abundant and there's no reason to spend so much on clothing.

Many items we have can be dressed up or given a different look with a new (or borrowed) accessory. A new belt, a pair of earrings or a scarf can dress up any outfit. Styling your hair differently and adjusting makeup can also add a new touch.

I have things in my closet I don't even remember buying. Perhaps if I take an inventory of the contents of my closet, I'll be pleasantly surprised to find things I had forgotten about. I'm also a fan of vintage clothing and accessories. A friend of mine was wearing the most beautiful brooch recently that was a family heirloom passed on to her from her grandmother. Brooches and hair accessories can add character to an ensemble and can be a solution to that new look you want to achieve. And what better way to make an occasion more special than by wearing something sentimental.

Shoes can also give a new look to your attire. If you can't afford new shoes, take another look in your closet to see what treasures you can uncover. This summer, many women are wearing cowboy boots with lightweight skirts. It's a fun look that creates a more casual appeal. Flip-flops are also great with skirts or cropped pants. If you have to make a purchase, Havana's flip-flops are very affordable.

Mixing colors can be an interesting challenge, but this season, vibrant colors are in. Pink, turquoise, orange, green, and yellow are almost all interchangeable. I know I have plenty of pink and turquoise tops that can easily be matched with a pair of black or white pants and or skirts.

There are definitely ways for me to be creative with the clothing I already have. The challenge is to change my way of thinking and be more resourceful.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

Starting out in Hampton Bays, I stopped in at Sassafras and Noels. Both shops are running a huge sale offering 10% to 50% off on Da-Nang, Shoshanna, Free People, Sweet Pea, and so much more. Noels is doing a 10% to 50% off on Crabtree and Evelyn, furniture, and Caspari products. Not to be missed, get going, the merchandise is flying out the door!

At Saks Fifth Avenue on Hampton Road in Southampton, you will find something new, something special.....What is it? It's "Hamptons," one of twenty-three Bond No. 9 fragrances. Bond No. 9 has made it their mission to restore artistry to perfumery and create a distinctive scent of New York. The fragrances are then sold by the ounce in a system called, parfums à l' ounce. The fresh salty sea meets greenery in a scent that evokes the true Hamptons lifestyle, making it apropos whether dining or soaking up the sun. They are available at Bond No. 9's three Manhattan stores and nationwide at Saks Fifth Avenue, including the Southampton store.

Urban Nomad Collection, East Hampton

At Lenox on Main Street in Southampton, you can shop 'til you drop with their "summer dot sale" that will run most of the summer. Lenox is offering from 30% to 60% off selected merchandise. All you have to do is look for the dots, and you can save, save, save. There are over a thousand items to choose from, including seasonal dinnerware, select candles, holiday pieces, bowls, glassware, vases and so much more. Get going, while all the good stuff is still there.

If the kids are getting a little bored while strolling in Southampton, stop in at Stevenson's Toys & Games on Jobs Lane for a look at everything for summer fun. The shop is chock full of summer boredom breakers including Foosball tables, indoor and outdoor pool tables, playhouses, pool and beach toys, kites, battery powered cars, motorcycles, go karts and scooters just to name a few. There is an incredible selection of fun stuff for all ages here, so get strolling.

Fortunoff Backyard Store on Montauk Highway in Southampton has it all going on with their "Backyard Clearance Event" with 25% to 50% off from five to 12 piece aluminum dining sets. The garden swings, recliners and seating sets are also on sale at 40% off, along with a stainless BBQ at 60% off.

If you are looking for a plant sale to fill up your garden, for one day only, Saturday, July 9 from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. you can scoop up summer flowering perennials in two and three gallon containers. Many of the plants are priced at $5. The "perennial plant clearance sale" is located at 17 Harrison Avenue, North Sea, Southampton.

Mark your calendar for a fabulous private Mikelle Design "Jewelry Trunk Show" that is hosted by HB Interiors at 2408 Main Street in Bridgehampton (above Country Gear), on July 16, 17 and July 23. Mikelle Terson, the designer, will be there with her gorgeous, packed-with-power, and soulful collection that is truly magical. To get a preview, log onto her website at: www.mikelledesign.com and call 631-537-8318 for hours of the show.

There are special sales going on at The East Hampton Neighborhood House on Three Mile Harbor Road in East Hampton on Thursday and Friday, July 7 and 8 from 1 to 7:30 p.m. Aude Bronson-Howard, costume designer for feature films and owner of the ABH Design boutique in Manhattan, is once again bringing her Urban Nomad collection to the East End. These special sales will feature ABH's unique, exclusive products, as well as her selection of items created by artisans and friends. Look for fabulous summer sandals that are decorated with jewels, rhinestones and seashells, Moroccan glassware, silk quilted jackets, delicate hand blown glassware and fragrant candles from Mathias in Provence, France, whimsical stuffed animals, pareos and sarongs, and many other beautiful and unusual products. For complete information call 631-324-0175. And.....stay tuned.....I will let you know when she is coming to the Bridgehampton Community House in Bridgehampton in August.

Outdoors on Main Street in Amagansett is having a "25% off Sale" on selected clothing and sandals for men, women and children. This shop is packed to the rafters with great beach chairs and umbrellas, beach toys, hats, sandals, shorts, sneakers, tank tops, kites, frisbees, just great stuff. This is a fun clothing and footwear store that is the perfect fit for everyone in the family.

Walk on the wild side! The Fashion Crest Boutique at 8 Grand Avenue in Shelter Island Heights is having a "Sandals & Sangria" presentation. Stop in, get out of the heat and enjoy a cool glass of Sangria and meet designer Lubna Abu-Osba. Her collections of modern sandals with an exotic twist are a fun addition to every summer wardrobe. You will be glad you stopped in, trust me on this one.

On The North Fork: At Barneys New York Outlet at Tanger Outlet Center in Riverhead, the "Summer Sale" can save from 50% to 80% off on selected clothing, shoes and accessories for men and women.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Shopping!

If you have any questions or comments, or your shop is having a sale, I would love to know about it. E-mail me at Shoptil@danspapers.com or by fax at: 631-537-1292.

Happy Fourth of July!

With a little help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

Fourth of July is really cool in the Hamptons. Lots to do and I did plenty.

My first stop was a party at Stewart Lane and Bonnie Comley's home in East Hampton. I went swimming in their large, natural looking pool. A long time later I was still swimming with my older friend and daughter of Stewart and Bonnie, Leah. She and I were in a painting done at a charity auction. Then we had hot dogs and hamburgers. There were lots of camera people there taking pictures of adults but this column is about kids so here are some of those pictures. Stop Two, later that day, was at the home of Jerry Della Femina and Judy Licht and their family on the ocean in East Hampton. I wanted to go on the beach but I was not allowed. Also not allowed this year was the fireworks so the hosts had a cool virtual version. This year there was a kids corner created by the kids with games and Play-Doh. I met Jerry's grandchildren and other kids of the guests. We played and had more fun than the adults. We also went on the big trampoline on the lawn of the house and had a jumping contest. I did not win. The last event I covered was the annual Southampton parade. I've been there before – I have also been to the other events I wrote up before –maybe I am becoming a true Hamptons' girl? The parade is always great for me; it was one of the first things I remember from the Hamptons. I remember the loud shots from the old guns – Ouch! – the soldiers old and young, all the flags and everyone cheering. Happy Birthday America!

I am getting to love this column more and more. Last Sunday at my beach club, La Ronde, I was walking around to the tables and showing everyone my column.

Have a party or event coming? Email my dad david@nexpert.com and I might write it up.

Thanks.

Classic Cars With Bob Gelber

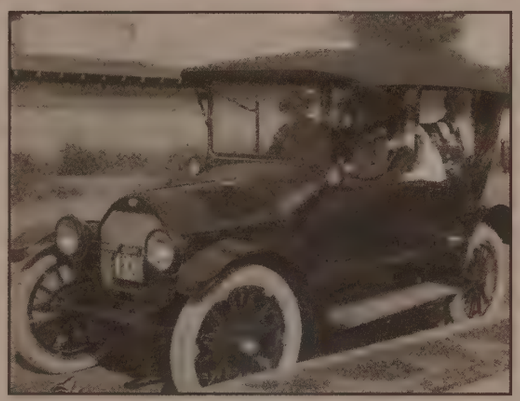

In an e-mail to me this past week, the question posed asked what I think is the best car in the world. That is a very hard question to answer, because what is best for one driver may be a poor choice for another.

In 1904, two very anal car guys manufactured a vehicle that was, compared with other cars in producion at the time, incredibly quiet running. Charles Royce and Henry Rolls strove for the highest standards of motor car building. The simple policy of Henry Royce was, "To take a part and make it better."

While other cars of the era actually made running sounds like chitty chitty bang bang, the 1907 Rolls Royce was so quiet that it was named the "Ghost." The London show car happened to be painted silver, thus the now famous name of the Silver Ghost. In 1907, Rolls Royce, in all modesty, called the Silver Ghost, "The best car in the world." It probably was when compared to the other fledgling motor car contraptions that seemed to be popping up monthly.

However, just a year later in 1908, across the pond, a creative young American named Henry Ford brought out his Model T Ford. Compared to the snooty English Rolls Royce, with custom bodywork that could cost up to $3,000, the original Model Ts sold for $850. Over the years, the price of the model T dropped to $260 for the roadster. To many, the Ford Model T was the best car in the world. It gave inexpensive transportation to the masses and, on top of that, was very nicely built and extremely dependable.

Often, during the development of the motor car, different cars have been considered to be the "best in the world." The incredibly engineered, supercharged sporting cars built by Mercedes Benz, from 1926 to 1932, were, at the time, thought to have been the greatest automobiles in the world. These prewar

Model T Ford

Mercedes motorcars with letters like K, S or SSKL as their model names, are among the most valuable collector cars worldwide. Every one of them is a joy to behold.

One may think that speed or build quality is a prerequisite for a car being named the best car in the world, but this is not necessarily true. No one has ever postulated that some of the incredibly fast, exotic super cars are the best. Certainly some very fast Ferraris, Porsches and other expensive exotics are excellent cars, but every one of them has inherent weaknesses, running the gamut from practicality and comfort to sheer small size.

Build quality is certainly a factor when it comes to holding the title of the "best." But I know of some beautifully made cars that have dependability problems, and frankly, handle like slugs. Certainly not traits that I would want included on my best cars list.

Contrary to popular opinion, the best car in the world should be a compromise. It shouldn't have balls-to-the-wall acceleration, since this would jeopardize its fuel efficiency. But it should be fast enough to rapidly pass slower vehicles at any speed. Most importantly, it should handle well. Handling is the most important facet of an automobile's greatness. All of the best four door sedans on the road today are the ones that stick to the road. They are almost as tenacious on the tarmac as some of the wonderfully pure sports cars available.

With the sole exception of the original 1949 Volkswagen Beetle, there has never really been a great ugly sports car. The greatest car in the world should be one of the most beautiful. It's the one you speed up to see on the highway, or walk over to view in a parking lot. It should be a creative design and look good in any color. The shape should be so dramatic that, fifty years later, it will still cause pause among those with good taste.

In the past, there have been many cars with the above attributes. The '49 Jaguar Xk 120s were the best of the breed as far as sports cars were concerned. The '60s, '70s and '80s Mercedes 6.3, 6.9 and 500 sedans were the fastest and best built four door rocket ships of their era. There were the wonderfully simple shapes of the '50s and '60s Porsches, especially the '55 Speedster. The Citroen ID 19 sedan, perhaps the most radical car ever to see production, was an art form unto itself.

So, what is the best car in the world? Today, unlike yesterday, there are so many truly excellent cars in production, it really is impossible to say. If it's in your budget, looks hot, doesn't break, handles well, causes you to smile when driven, and, by some fluke, gets decent gas mileage, perhaps it's in your garage.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

Inventions That Need To Be Invented

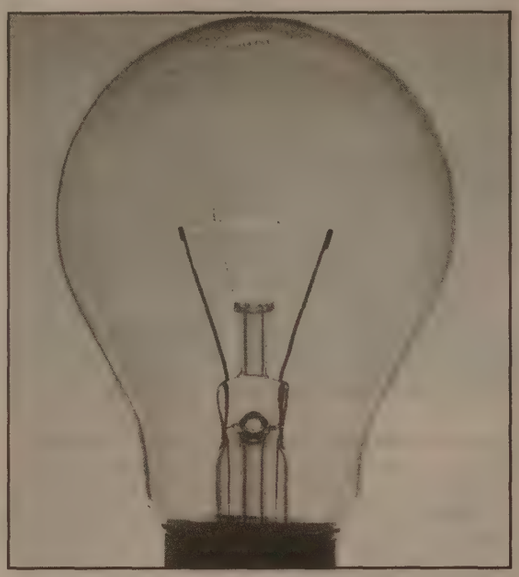

Every once in a while I will think up an invention. This happens to me about once a month. When I do come up with an invention, the first person that I call is my friend Peter in Boston. Peter, who works as a network manager at State Street Bank in Boston, is a computer whiz and therefore (at least in my mind anyway) a genius. Last weekend, Peter and his girlfriend came out for the 4th of July celebrations in the Hamptons. We were having Sunday breakfast, along with my brother Gabriel, when we started talking about brilliant invention ideas. I think almost all of these ideas could make you rich. The only problem is that none of us have the intelligence or the willpower to create any of these inventions. However, this does not mean that we do not want to have them.

Silent Chips – Have you ever been sitting on the couch watching your favorite movie or television show while eating a bag of potato chips? Of course you have. Everybody does this every once in a while. One of the most frustrating things about watching and eating delicious potato chips is that the crunch from the potato chips makes it so that you can't hear anything. That's where silent potato chips come in. Somebody needs to invent a potato chip that is crunchy but doesn't make the annoying crunchy noise in your head while you are trying to enjoy the latest episode of "24."

Zero Calorie Chips – Speaking of potato chips, why do they have to have all the fat and calories that they do? If they can make a can of Coca-Cola that tastes and looks exactly like regular Coke, only it has no calories or sugar, then someone should make a potato chip that has no fat, salt or calories.

Starbucks QuickShots or "Shotio's" – When is Starbucks going to offer espresso in a hypodermic needle? We all need that caffeine to get through the day. I want to inject it right into my blood stream like a drug addict. There is no doubt in my mind that this will eventually be offered at Starbucks. I just want bragging rights for saying it first.

The Starbucks IV Drip – The Starbucks IV Drip will be a system that can be purchased for office or home use. Starbucks will have "coffee administrators" come to your office and wire up your entire staff. A giant, black, IV pouch will sit at the top of the office building as tubes flow to each desk. Your employees simply stick the tube into their arms and the caffeine happily flows into their blood streams. In the future, you will be able to do all of this, but wirelessly. Getting tired at work will be a thing of the past.

The Lazy Susan House – Okay, enough about caffeine. The Lazy Susan House will be the new real estate fad. Basically, you set a house up on a rotating dial so when you get bored with your view you can push a button and have it spin around. Every house in the Hamptons will want this installed into their foundations. Just having this feature on your house will make it be worth double what it was worth when you bought it.

The Dogcat – Did you hear about the liger? This is a cross between a tiger and a lion. It is real. They actually made this happen somehow. Well, when are they going to do this with house pets? The Dogcat will be a combination animal of both a dog and a cat and it will have all of the benefits of both animals and none of the negatives. For example, a dogcat will have the personality of a dog but be able to bathe itself like a cat. It will bark at an intruder, but start purring when you pet it. How cool would this be?

The Emotion Sensing iPod – Have you ever been feeling down about things and then heard an uplifting song and felt better? Don't you wish that this could happen all the time? Well, with The Emotion Sensing iPod, you can. This is an iPod that is set to your nervous system and plays music based on your mood. If you are excited about running a sporting event, the song "Eye of The Tiger" will automatically start blasting in your ears based on the calculations automatically made by your iPod. If you are in the middle of a car chase, the iPod can figure it out and car-chasing music will come on. Life could be like one big movie. How awesome is this idea?

The Self Organizing Refrigerator – Okay, okay, this is kind of impossible to create, but somebody needs to make this machine. I all too often find myself staring into space in the fridge and never seem to be able to find anything that I want. We need to a machine that organizes everything in the fridge.

The Joke Telling Earpiece – Have you ever been at a party talking to someone you just met and felt like you need to pick up the convo with a joke, but when you start thinking, you can't seem to come up with one? Well, the problem is solved with the joke-telling earpiece. This is an earpiece that you stick in your ear and contains an mp3 chip that can store up to five thousand jokes. You can buy jokes at an ITunes type website for twenty cents a joke.

The Conversation Rememberer – Speaking of awkward party situations, have you ever been in the middle of a conversation and then completely forgotten what you were talking about? Then you are forced to either go along with something like you remember or you just simply say "What were we just talking about again?" Well, this is no longer a problem with the conversation rememberer. This device constantly records everything that you say in five minutes increments so whenever you forget what you were talking about, you can simply press rewind and remember it.

Alarm Clock Bed – In conclusion, the last and final invention should be the alarm clock bed. This is a bed that is attached to your alarm clock and violently shakes when the alarm goes off. You can even buy an accessory that releases angry bees that fly around your room causing you to jump out of bed and run out the door. You will never over sleep again.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

A 9-mile Romp Through the Woods

A couple of weeks ago, while walking to Laurel Canyon, I saw a blaze on a trail that said "Hither Woods Trail." Later, I identified this point as the beginning of Redmond's Path. I assumed the blaze indicated that there was a new loop trail in Hither Woods. This extensive trail network lends itself to the creation of hiking loops. I made a mental note of where I had intercepted the marked trail and resolved to return to walk the loop trail when I had more time.

I returned a couple of weeks later and I walked north from the Navy Road parking lot along the dirt path that parallels Fort Pond Bay. It was a warm sunny morning and there wasn't another person in sight. I visited the kiosk with its fresh supply of maps. These maps are an earlier version of part of what is included in the maps sold by East Hampton Trails Preservation Society. They are an excellent reference for walking Hither Woods and they are free. I grabbed a map and started penning in the route I was walking in anticipation of hiking the full loop before the end of the day. Past the kiosk, I came to a sign that said "No Vehicles Beyond This Point" and a gate. A short distance beyond that I reached a trail on my left. Since I was not yet on the Paumanok Path, there was no rectangular turn blaze indicating that I should turn left. Refer to your map; when you turn left you are actually traveling west on the eastbound portion of the Paumanok Path. The trail takes you to a place where you can cross the railroad tracks on level ground. This is an active train route, so remove your headphones and look both ways before you cross. A quarter mile after crossing the tracks the Paumanok Path turns south on Riah's Ridge Trail. The last time I walked this trail, I followed it south on my way to Laurel Canyon, but I noted that straight ahead was a tan-colored, diamond-shaped, tin Hither Woods Trail blaze. At this trail's crossroads, there are some informal wooden trails signs that point in the direction of Riah's Ridge Trail and Redmond's Path. This gives a "backwoods flavor" to the walk that I rather enjoy. You will find these signs throughout this network of trails. I certainly prefer these signs to the tape, paper, ribbons, etc. that I see informally marking the trails. Putting up signs or markers without the permission of the land manager is illegal; I strongly advise against it.

This day I followed some blazes that were obviously sanctioned by the land manager. I looked at my map and saw that I was traveling down Redmond's Path. I continued on this path for a half-mile when the blazes went from tan to pink. I looked at my map again and realized that I was now on Rod's Valley Road heading towards Flaggy Hole Road. It was at this point that I realized that I was not on a loop trail; each trail is marked with its own color. I had already decided that I would lead this hike on August 20th for EHTPS, so I began to look at the map and piece together what I thought might be an enjoyable walk. I followed the Rod's Valley pink blazes to the Flaggy Hole Road blue blazes. My plan was to travel through the center of the Preserve, head north and follow the Paumanok Path along the coast back east to where I had begun.

My first attempt to head north was on the Serpent's Back Trail, which is marked by black blazes. The vegetation is growing in on the trail, giving a pleasant tunnel effect. The northern portion of this trail has a stable, cushiony tread creating a very pleasant hiking experience. I thought this was a lovely way back north to the Paumanok Path. Unfortunately, it is not safe to cross the railroad tracks here and the trail disappears just north of the tracks, necessitating bushwhacking to get back to the Paumanok Path. This was no problem for me, but may be for others. I was averse to the idea of backtracking, but it seemed I had no other option.

Read my article next week in Dan's Papers to find out about the rest of my adventure!

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

War of the Worlds

Just as sure as the Lord made little green apples to inspire hugely popular, ditzy songs and mosquitoes who are very determined to take a big bite out of life – there are Steven Spielberg movies to bust the blocks out of movie entertainment. The impressive list of his earnest but shallow oeuvre have made his producing companies virtual cash machines and, it is justified since all have been gosh darned near-perfectly made. This may be the reason why his scarier updating of the classic science fiction War of the Worlds impressed the beejeepers out of me but, the sensations did not linger any longer than a good Chinese take-out dinner. The quite masterful director has reached a point in his prodigious career when, commanding the supreme army of artists and technicians who are extensions of himself, he is able with this powerful force to whip an audience as readily as we took Iraq. But, make no mistake, his skill is at least as decisive as his power. This is worrisome too. Like a master surgeon, he is able to manipulate a herring into a shark. A magnificent feat, but who knows?

Of other renditions, the very serviceable 1953 movie of H.G. Wells' brilliant novel prying into an obscure future (written in 1898!) may seem more dated than Wells' book. However, considering the time and its particular paranoia brought about by the atomic bomb, flying saucers were seen all over the place, including as a novelty ice cream sandwich. The popularization of "the fear of the day" is not new and, I should not chide Mr. Spielberg for tapping into the terror of 9/11. It seems most natural, but then again, to play upon an already sensitive audience so realistically, is like the work of a pool shark – no contest.

But, hey, Mr. Spielberg gets back to some of his good old-fashioned directing know-how of Jaws push and pull tension in spite of a dumb mechanical shark. It ain't all computer generated mayhem (although Steven's SFX are the best). This is what stands him head, shoulders and Bonacker's cap above all other action directors. For those of you who want to be all shook up – this movie is for you. Trying desperately to keep ahead of all the shaking, baking, incinerating, and vaporizing is your favorite man-on-the-run, Tom Cruise, as usual, not cruising, but full steam ahead attempting to keep his children out of the reach of long, sinewy tentacles extended from big metal eyeballs, not to mention those horrific ZAPS! Well, you know the drill. Not rare items, but especially well done by the Spielberg SWAK team. (that's Sealed With A Kiss team): Janusz Kaminski on camera, Rick Carter Product Designer and Editor Michael Kahn. Certainly, there's John Williams' music, but just between us and an alien or two (Yikes!), some of his best moments are when he puts the band on hold. I'm sure we must credit the director, who, to repeat, does some real directing. No sideline assists. He can make a tiny vein like trail left behind by Them as frightening as East Hampton traffic on the 4th of July.

So movie fans, what am I trying to say? I'm mostly asking the question, why? Why remake War of the Worlds and, especially why by Mr. Spielberg? I guess, because it's there, like Mount Everest. No doubt he hasn't lost any of the thrill of moviemaking. I say, why not reach out a bit more to higher ground. Surely Schindler List's is not the ultimate peak for him.

Steven Spielberg has recently announced, publicly, commencement of production on his version of the assassination responses to the killing of 11 Israeli athletes in the Munich Olympics of 1972. Presumed to be a very controversial subject, it has been done before. Obviously he will do it better. Will it take him to a higher plateau? We'll see if it has real teeth.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

Dave Evans' MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

War of the Worlds

Spielberg is a master of spectacle and Tom Cruise is pretty comfortable with aliens but what of poor little Dakota Fanning? What H.G. Wells wrote and Orson Welles read so eerily on the radio here becomes summer blockbuster fare. Words are out as is subtlety but expect big bangs and gung-ho patriotism galore.

Cinderella Man

Summer may be too breezy a time to unleash true drama on a public hungry for special effects and fireworks. As such Ron Howard's solid but serious film, charting Jim Braddock's phoenix-like 1935 victory over the then heavyweight champion, has taken an unfair beating at the box-office. Then again, perhaps the public is simply unwilling to fund Russell Crowe's random acts of violence on hotel employees any longer.

Rebound

Martin Lawrence stars as a superstar college basketball coach with a temper, demoted to teaching junior high after accidentally killing a rival team's mascot. Lawrence molds the bunch of lovable misfits into a proper team just as they teach him the kind of life lessons that only lovable misfits can.

The Fantastic Four

Like clockwork, another comic-book movie arrives to outrage the "original" fans but thrill the children. For those in somewhat less arrested development, characters such as The Thing and Doctor Victor Von Doom may grate, but if you're in the mood for a more lighthearted action film than Batman Begins, this might fill the void.

Bewitched

Remake fever is alas not over just yet and Nicole Kidman seems not to have learnt her lesson after last year's disastrous Stepford Wives. That said this boasts a solid supporting cast of Michael Caine, Will Ferrell and Shirley Maclaine along with an Ephron sisters script.

Dark Water

From the pen of Koji Suzuki, the author of The Ring, the latest American adaptation of a Japanese horror movie follows a recently divorced mother and child as they discover their new home is haunted. Boasting perhaps the least thrilling title since Heavy Rain, the film instead relies on its extremely talented supporting cast, which includes Tim Roth, Dougray Scott and the great Pete Postlethwaite.

Mad Hot Ballroom

This debut directorial effort from documentary-filmmaker Marilyn Agrelo follows a set of school children as they enter the world of ballroom dancing. The kids are from all over the city and Agrelo depicts every neighborhood she films as a hotbed of young talent. Heartwarming without being stomach-churning the film is lovely, shunning, cheap sentimentality for genuine joy.

Herbie Fully Loaded

In the age of the SUV the love bug may seem a puny competitor, but Disney has gone all out with the return of everybody's favorite talking car. Herbie has been souped up, Lohan's chest has been digitally shrunk down but can either of these things balance out the ballast of co-star Michael Keaton who has not had a hit in over a decade?

Entertainment In Town

preview: cabaret and comedy...by jan silver

East End audiences are cosmopolitan and enjoy listening to top-flight performers in smaller venues, so East Hampton's Guild Hall and the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center have filled their summer schedules with wonderful cabaret artists. Sag Harbor's Bay Street Theatre adds a little spice with its "Comedy Club" series.

Barbara Carroll, Jeff Harnar, Andrea Marcovicci and Sam Harris started Guild Hall's summer off on a high. This Friday and Saturday, cabaret favorites KT Sullivan and her singing-dancing-pianist partner Mark Nadler are on the John Drew Theater stage with the songs of Broadway composers Jule Styne and Stephen Sondheim. On Sunday, Lee Davis' and Patricia Watt's "American Musical Theater Salutes" Cy Coleman, composer of Sweet Charity, City of Angels and many more shows.

Guild Hall continues its intimate musical theater line-up with Lypsinka (John Epperson) performing "her" Off Broadway hit show The Boxed Set, a collage of Joan Crawford, Phyllis Diller, Betty Davis and others on July 15 and 16. At a late show on July 16, Epperson takes off the wigs and makeup to reveal himself in "Show Trash."

On July 23, "Jim Caruso's Cast Party" takes place with the dapper Caruso and talented singers Hilary Kole and Karen Mason. The next evening, July 24, the consummate cabaret singer Wesla Whitfield performs her popular show "Nice Work: The Music of the Gershwins."

American Musical Theater Salutes is back July 31, celebrating Irving Berlin on Broadway with his daughter Mary Ellin Barrett and performers Judy Blazer and Martin Vidnovic. Bandleaders Mike Carney and Bob Hardwick battle it out with four-piece combos in a musical jam session on August 5. Singer/comedienne Angela LaGreca comes in on August 6 with guest friends Tina Giorgi and Cory Kahaney to make mischief as "Funny Fabulous Females."

August 12-14 is a very musical weekend. Judy Garland (Tommy Femia) and Barbra Streisand (Steven Brinberg) sing their greatest hits in "Legendary Ladies Live!" on Friday. The Paul Winter Consort plays a "world music" concert on Saturday, and American Musical Theater Salutes offers its summer finale, "Well, Hello, Jerry!" (Broadway songs of Jerry Herman) on Sunday with Lee Roy Reams, KT Sullivan and Christine Pedi. Call the box office at 631-324-4050 for tickets to all Guild Hall shows.

Emmylou Harris

Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center also has a spectacular schedule. Joy Behar, Peter Cincotti, Chaka Khan, Madeleine Peyroux, Joan Rivers and Audra McDonald have already performed, but Tony Orlando and then the political satire quartet The Kinsey Sicks are onstage this weekend. Next Friday, husky baritone Michael McDonald's show is a sellout, but the two Garys – Puckett and Lewis – will perform on Saturday, July 16. "The Fab Faux," a delightful Beatles tribute band, sings and plays on July 24, Chris Botti gives a concert on July 30, and the Derek Trucks Band performs on July 31.

WHBPAC doesn't skip a beat in August. Country and folk music great Emmylou Harris sings on August 5 and the Bela Fleck Acoustic Trio performs on August 7. Crooner/guitarist John Pizzarelli comes in on August 12 and Angelique Kidjo is there the following evening. Patti LaBelle is the headliner for PAC's benefit concert on August 21.

Country favorite Dickey Betts is onstage August 27 and Bruce Hornsby on August 28. Labor Day weekend has wonderful diversity: swing and big-band music with the Cab Calloway Orchestra on September 2 and cabaret's greatest practitioner Barbara Cook on September 3. The summer season is given a final send-off with the Latin rhythms of Los Lobos on September 30. All WHBPAC tickets can be reserved at the box office by calling 631-288-1500 after noon.

Sag Harbor's Bay Street Theatre is best known for its dramatic, comedic and musical productions, but they've added a little spice this summer with a Monday night comedy club series. Jeffrey Ross and Robert Klein have already graced the Bay Street stage, and next up on Monday, July 18, is Susie Essman, one of the stars of Larry David's HBO series Curb Your Enthusiasm. Another HBO comedy star, Paula Poundstone, comes to Bay Street on July 25. In August, cable TV's ACE award-winner Richard Jeni is onstage August 15, comedy-club headliner Tom Papa is there on August 22, and the very popular Lewis Black will perform at 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. on August 29. Tickets for the comedy shows are $38 and can be purchased online at www.baystreet.org or at the box office (631-725-9500 after 11 a.m. Tuesday through Saturday).

Entertainment In The Hamptons

Out of the Question Begins at Guild Hall

If you've ever wondered what goes on behind the scenes of your favorite Hamptons restaurants, stop wondering and get over to Guild Hall at 8 p.m. Thursday night July 14, as Out of the Question: The Hamptons Celebrity Roundtable begins its third season with host/moderator Warren Strugatch.

"Dishin' It With Hamptons Restaurateurs" brings together four top East End restaurant owners to discuss what the business is really like. After a few questions from the host, the program will open into a conversation among the panelists, then conclude with an open-mic question-and-answer session. Audience participation is welcome. Panelists at the July 14th show include Jerry Della Femina, adman and restaurateur; Eric Lemonides, co-owner of boisterous Almond restaurant and this season's new hotspot, the Mexican-themed Almondito; Mark Smith, partner in the management company that includes Nick & Toni's, the celebrity watering hole, Rowdy Hall, an unpretentious chow-down spot, and the South-of-the-Border influenced La Fondita; and Deborah Rivera Pittorino, owner and executive chef of La Cuvee Bistro at the Greenporter Hotel and Spa, which Wine Spectator magazine called "an airy den of minimalist mod." Mr. Strugatch said that the topic of Hamptons restaurants seemed a natural series opener.

"Dining out is a major pastime here for so many people," said Mr. Strugatch, a writer, consultant and media personality who lives in East Quogue. "Almost everyone has a favorite restaurant or two, and tempers flare when you try to rate the best seafood, agree on whose desserts rule the roost, or name the bartender who mixes the best drinks. "Dining out here is about more than just the meal," he continued. "People can get riled up over table assignments, who gets greeted by the owner, and, sometimes, who gets in the door and who doesn't."

The July 14 program will give audiences a chance to hear the restaurateurs' side of things, and perhaps give restaurateurs a piece of their minds as well.

"Running a restaurant in the Hamptons is a sure way to get know the public at its best and at its worst," Mr. Strugatch continued. "Customers get pushy making reservations, impatient when faced with delays, and flat-out rude when they don't get their way. Restaurateurs have their horror stories, and I expect we'll hear a few of them that night."

Customers have their horror stories too, he said: prices jacked up when the season begins, rude waiters and maitre d's, and arrogant practices based on what the market will tolerate, at least in the summer.

This year's guests represent a cross-section of Hamptons' restaurateurs.

Mr. Della Femina's namesake restaurant was awarded three stars by both Newsday and The New York Times. Its cuisine is consistently praised by reviewers, and its reservation books often reads like a Who's Who of Manhattan and the Hamptons. Caricatures of notable guests, such as Steven Spielberg and Billy Joel, line the wall behind the bar.

Eric Lemonides co-owns Almond and Almondito. Almond serves traditional bistro favorites as well as contemporary American fare, and on Friday nights has become a popular gay meeting spot. This year the outgoing Mr. Lemonides and his business partner, Jason Weiner, opened Almondito, a Mexican spot, in what had been Ruby Red, and have on their hands the restaurant hit of the season. Mr. Lemonides got his start in the business as a maitre d' at Della Femina's.

Mark Smith left a career in the apparel business to join the late Jeff Salaway as a partner in his restaurant business, which includes Nick & Toni's, Rowdy Hall and La Fondita. Detail-oriented, Mr. Smith said that the charismatic Mr. Salaway, who died in an auto accident several years ago, taught him how to deal effectively with all sorts of customers, and remains an important influence on him.

Widely-traveled since her childhood as a diplomat's daughter, Deborah Rivera Pittorino got her start in the restaurant business a few years ago when she purchased a run-down building in Greenport and renovated it as the Greenporter Hotel and Spa. She serves as executive chef of its La Cuvee Wine Bar and French Bistro. The program will begin with Dan Rattiner, editor of Dan's Papers, who will tell a restaurant-themed story or two in his inimitable style. After the show, audience members are invited to head outdoors to join Mr. Strugatch and panelists in Guild Hall's lovely garden for a reception catered by The Golden Pear Café and Castello di Borghese vineyard. The reception is free to ticket-holders.

The series is sponsored by Dan's Papers.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

Spindletop Productions Scares up Fun at Gurney's

Beginning July 14 and continuing every Thursday through Labor Day, Spindletop Productions will present "High Jinks on the High Seas," a murder mystery comedy dinner-theater. The interactive shows will be held on the oceanside Lido Deck at Gurney's Sea Grille in Montauk, which will be transformed into a fictional ocean liner, the S.S. Monte. The seaside view gives theater-goers the illusion of sailing on the ocean without having to leave their seats. Attendees will act as passengers on the 1940s ocean liner, named for the restaurant's owners, and are encouraged to dress for their parts in 1940s cruise wear.

The premise of the fast-paced dinner show is a cruise to celebrate Lady Beulah Bowels' (Vay David) 70th birthday. During her trans-Atlantic voyage to Southampton, the party is interrupted by a ghastly murder. The ship's "passengers" become players in a real-life game of Clue, trying to help Detective Dick Dick Dick (James Sweeney) solve the mystery. As they watch a love triangle unfold between Steward Stuart Stewart, the beautiful maid Felicity Fluff (Molly Mckenna) and the sexy Bolshoi ballerina Ivana Humpalot (Tanya Tavereau), theater-goers must search for hints of treachery and deceit. Characteristic of most dinner-theater performances, "High Jinks" features a good deal of improvisation as audience members interrogate the characters, hoping to crack the case. The show features a mysterious crew, each character more suspicious than the next. Does Captain Horatio Alvin Hatchu (Peter Fitzgerald), a courageous war veteran who bursts into song when certain words are uttered, have something to hide? Is Chef Jacque Le Coq (Jonathan Peters), the arrogant master of French cuisine, cooking up a secret plan? Or is the slightly hard-of-hearing Lady Bowels more cunning than she lets on? And there is something about Buford Lee Cox (Jason Nower) that doesn't seem quite right..... The only way to learn the identity of the culprit is to experience this murder mystery for yourself. "Passengers" who guess the murderer can win prizes, such as passes to the world-famous Thalasso spa and a weekend at Gurney's.

The mystery-comedy is the brainchild of Jonathan Peters of Spindletop Productions, an eastern Long Island production company known for its exciting and comedic performances. Peters wrote, produced and acts in "High Jinks," which like most Spindletop productions, uses professionals recruited from the local area.

Tickets for the 7 p.m. performances are $75, plus tax and gratuity. They can be purchased at Gurney's (631-668-1700) or reserved by visiting www.theatermania.com or by calling 1-866-811-4111.

Music Festival of the Hamptons

The annual Music Festival of the Hamptons kicks off its 10th season this weekend, beginning Friday, July 8. The concert series, one of the cultural highlights of the summer season, is the result of President and founder Eleanor Sage Leonard's vision to share her love of music with others in the Hamptons. This year, the Festival is dedicated to the memory of her great uncle Benno Moiseiwitsch, a pianist.

This year, the Festival Tent will be on the grounds of the Morriss Center School in Bridgehampton. Many of the Festival's 24 programs will be held there, and several events will take place at Wölffer Estate Vineyards.

The Festival's exciting season starts off on a high note with the Opening Concert Gala on Friday, July 8. The night highlights the music of Mozart, with a concert featuring the Hampton Chamber Orchestra conducted by Lukas Foss, the Festival's Artistic Director, and 11-year-old pianist Drew Petersen. The concert will include performances of Mozart's Concerto No. 21 in C Major, Overture to Don Giovanni, and Symphony #35 (The Haffner). The evening begins at 6:15 with cocktails and a buffet, and concludes with a dessert buffet after the concert. Tickets to the event, which will be held at the Festival Tent, are $150 for both the concert and dessert buffet or $75 for the concert only.

On Saturday, July 9, there will be a performance entitled Mozart and the Spanish Mozart Arriaga. This features the Arriaga String Quartet, named for the "Spanish Mozart," Juan Crisostomo de Arriaga. It begins at 8:00 p.m. at the Festival Tent. Tickets are $50 reserved, $35 unreserved.

The music continues on Sunday, July 10, with the Guttman Family Concert, The Life and Music of Shostakovich Remembered. Children are free, and adult tickets are $35. The show will be held at Wölffer Estate Vineyards at 11:00 a.m. Also on Sunday, at the Festival Tent, watch the fusion of jazz and classical music into a visual experience as the piano and percussion duo Synchronicity performs. Tickets for the 7:30 p.m. show are $50 reserved, $35 unreserved.

Lukas Foss

The Second Annual East End Composers Concert will take place on Wednesday, July 13, at 8 p.m. Held at the Festival Tent, this concert will feature some of the best musicians the East End has to offer, including Festival Artistic Director Lukas Foss. Tickets for this show are $25.

On Thursday, July 14, Paul Schenly presents prize winning young artists at The Best of Pianofest at 8 p.m. Tickets for the event, to be held at the Festival Tent, are $25.

Be sure to look for upcoming children's events, including the Sunday, July 17 performance of Peter and the Wolf. Featuring music by the Hampton Chamber Orchestra and dancing by the Southampton Ballet Company, the show is narrated by Dan's Papers' own Dan Rattiner. For a complete listing of The Music Festival of the Hamptons' events, visit the website at www.musicfestivalofthehamptons.com Tickets for all events are available online or at 800-644-4418.

Take Five 2005 with Jan Silver

There's a broad range of entertainment on the South Fork this week. Singer Tony Orlando, political satire quartet The Kinsey Sicks, then the Peconic Chamber Orchestra are onstage at Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center this weekend. Guild Hall has KT Sullivan and Mark Nadler with their latest cabaret show, and then Broadway stars sing a tribute to composer Cy Coleman. The Music Festival of the Hamptons opens its 24-concert series tonight, and the seventh Riverhead Blues Festival runs this Friday through Sunday.

Bay Street Theatre begins preview performances of Sleuth next Tuesday, and Spindletop Productions opens its comedic mystery/dinner show at Gurney's Inn next Thursday. There are several accomplished authors talking about their latest work including award-winning historian David Reynolds in Bridgehampton on Friday, and Warren Strugatch's provocative "Out of the Question" discussion with Hamptons restaurateurs is next Thursday at Guild Hall, East Hampton. There are also four international film screenings this week.

Three other events of note: Sag Harbor's John Jermain library has a self-guided tour of six unique homes and gardens today, July 8, from 11 a.m. until 4 p.m. ($35, pick up tickets at the library 631-725-0049). Cormaria Center for Spiritual and Human Growth has a 100th birthday celebration at its Sag Harbor waterfront Retreat House.There's a lawn party and auction on Saturday, and an old-fashioned family picnic on Sunday (tickets $50 single, $75 for two; 631-725-4206). The Artists Association of East Hampton, whose members reside throughout the South Fork, has its annual studio tour of more than 50 artists' homes next Thursday through Saturday ($50, call 631-324-2225 or go online to www.aaeh.org).

There are many, many benefit events this weekend, so I will list them here but look for details in the "Benefits" section of this newspaper: Parrish Art Museum's Summer Gala (Sat., Southampton, 631-283-2118); Pianofest's Summer Garden Party (Sat., Sagaponack, 631-329-9115); East End Hospice's Box Art Auction (Sat., East Hampton, 631-288-7080); CMEE Children's Museum of the East End dinner dance (Sat., Bridgehampton, 631-537-8250); Family Counseling Service's "Fabulous Fifties" dinner dance (Sat., Westhampton Beach, 631-288-1954); and EEGO's party at the Bridgehampton Historical Society (Sat., Bridgehampton, 631-537-1088).

THEATER

Bay Street Theatre begins previews of its next production, the Tony Award-winning mystery Sleuth, next Tuesday in Sag Harbor. Tony Roberts and Derek Cecil head the cast. Performances are Tues. through Sat., 8 p.m., and Sun. at 7 p.m. Next Tues. is pay-what-you-can night for the first 50 tickets from 11 a.m. on that day at the Bay St. box office; regular tickets are $40-65 (call the box office at 631-725-9500).

Spindletop Productions presents an original murder mystery-farce as a dinner show starting next Thursday at Gurney's Inn, Montauk. "High Jinks on the High Seas" will also play Sundays and Mondays at The Purple Cow, East Hampton, starting July 17. The show is written by actor/director Jonathan Peters. Theatergoers who can guess whodunit win prizes. Tickets ($75-80) include a drink and gratuity; call either restaurant for reservations or order tickets online at www.theatermania.com (1-866-811-4111).

MUSIC

Tony Orlando brings his pop classics and smooth voice to Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center on Friday, 8:30 p.m. (tickets $75-100). The Kinsey Sicks, an all-male quartet specializing in political satire, will sing their way through "I Wanna Be A Republican" on Saturday at 8:30 p.m. ($45-65). On Sunday at 4 p.m., the Peconic Chamber Orchestra will give a concert ($25-35). For all WHBPAC tickets, call the box office after noon at 631-288-1500.

Guild Hall continues its informal cabaret-fest with songstress KT Sullivan and her singing/dancing/pianist partner Mark Nadler performing the pop standards of Jule Styne and Stephen Sondheim on Friday and Saturday, 8 p.m. ($40-60). On Sunday, 7:30 p.m., the "American Musical Theater Salutes" series continues with a tribute to recently deceased Broadway composer Cy Coleman with Broadway performers Cady Huffman, Christine Pedi and Michael Rupert ($45-50). Call the John Drew Theater box office at 631-324-4050 for tickets.

Music Festival of the Hamptons opens in Bridgehampton on Friday with a gala dinner and all-Mozart concert featuring 11-year-old pianist Drew Peterson and Lukas Foss conducting the Hampton Chamber Orchestra ($75 concert, $150 for concert and dessert buffet, $600 for entire evening and season pass). Saturday evening's program features the Arriaga String Quartet playing Mozart ($35-50). Sunday's 11 a.m. program is the Guttman family performing Shostakovich at Wolffer Estate Vineyards ($35, children free). Monday evening, the Tiffany Rising Stars performers are at Wolffer Estate Vineyards ($35-50), Wed.-Fri. there are music appreciation classes at 4 p.m. with Juilliard professor Kendall Briggs ($30). Next Wed. evening is the East End composers program ($25) and next Thursday, Pianofest artists will play in the Festival tent at The Morriss Center, Bridgehampton. For tickets, call 1-800-644-4418.

The Riverhead Blues Festival kicks off its seventh season with headliner Kerry Kearney at 9 p.m. tonight. The music starts earlier, 5 p.m., at the south stage along the Peconic River in the park behind Main St. Saturday's headline performer is Tinsley Ellis at 9 p.m. and Sunday's is Sam Taylor at 5 p.m. Some performances are at Vail-Leavitt Music Hall. ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

MAGIC SURREALISM AT THE WINTER TREE GALLERY

Work by Czech artist Vogen Cech-Colini, currently at Sag Harbor's Winter Tree Gallery, is not the kind you'll see everyday. First, it is representational art, not impressionistic landscape or abstraction, which are both popular at East End venues. Secondly, the style is Surrealism, a specialized distortion of reality that is also not often seen in the Hamptons.

And thirdly, Mr. Cech-Colini is not an area artist, although he did show at the Elaine Benson Gallery some years ago. Rather, he's lived in many countries, including Germany (where he got University training), Italy, Switzerland, Canada, and since the late 1950s, the United States.

Even with such varied exposure to international trends, Mr. Cech-Colini has been shaped mostly by the former Czechoslovakia, the nation of his birth. We're not suggesting that economically or politically repressed countries turn to Surrealism when expressing dissatisfaction or rebellion. (And Mr. Cech-Colini did leave his native land at an early age.) But there is logic behind the reasons that Surrealism sprang up in certain places.

These reasons apply to the presence of Magic Realism as well, especially in Eastern European films, where fantasy counterbalanced reality under Communism. (Even after the downfall of Communism, the style has continued although its intentions may be different now.)

This observation is not to suggest that Magic Realism/Surrealism is alive and well in the Czech Republic, for example. Western influences are popular, this critic recalling a show by Tony Smith in Prague a few years ago. Some Czech artists have commented that local art isn't as exciting or provocative since the Velvet Revolution; there's nothing to protest. Or at least now there are different things to protest.

Work by Cech-Colini

We are left with the question: what makes Mr. Cech-Colini's work an example of Surrealism and/or Magic Realism, regardless of whether it's currently a signature style for Eastern European sensibilities? First, incongruity is a strong motif. Consider the animal/human figures, like the part man/part horse that's playing a violin. Or the huge goose flying overhead in another painting, its insides composed of varied materials.

Akin to incongruity is dislocation. For example, there's a dove that hovers above the head of a white-wigged soldier. Another work features a depot that's marked Wilkes Barre (as in our own Pennsylvania). This is a specific site that seems odd when all of the other works are situated in Europe. Yet there's a lack of time and particular place that also marks Mr. Cech-Colini's pieces as Surrealism.

We wonder if the recurring objects, like wine glasses, grates, and arches, also contribute to a Freudian interpretation. Thus, we have another aspect of Surrealism exerting its power on the work.

The current exhibition will be on view at Sag Harbor's Winter Tree Gallery until July 25.

HONORING THE ARTIST: LARRY JOHNSON

A conversation with this week's cover artist, Larry Johnson, leads us in many different directions, from pretty sites on the East End to adventures regarding outdoor painting, to politics to this critic's elderly mother. Over the last several years, many such conversations have taken place, all over the phone and all concerning Mr. Johnson's various covers.

In other words, both interviewer and interviewee converse like old friends, yet they've never met. If they were to meet, they would probably recognize each other instantly.

Mr. Johnson's paintings reflect his personality, allowing his generosity and modesty to shine. There's something familiar and comforting about his sensibilities and it all is conveyed in his work: gentle scenes of serenity, sincerely absorbed by the artist and the viewer. There's no false slickness or subject matter that's aiming to please.

Mr. Johnson is very careful when he goes looking for locations, both on the North and South Shores. (This week's site overlooks Peconic Bay.) He may start out in the morning from his East Patchogue home and end up at Orient Point, traveling some eighty miles one way in the process.

Apparently Mr. Johnson likes scouting sites, taking it all in stride when relating the little annoyances which come with the territory. For example, he says he got "chased away by the mosquitoes when taking pictures for this cover painting." Another time, he got "stopped by local police for parking in Cutchogue without a permit."

All in all, however, Mr. Johnson enjoys the preparation involved with his endeavors. Or as he says it, "I love to start paintings; I don't like to finish them." We ask him the obvious, "Why?"

"When I start a painting, it's nice and loose," he answers immediately. "It's more spontaneous. I'm doing it from the shoulder. Then as I'm working, I have to pay attention to details more. I may fuss with a blade of grass for days." We have a feeling that Mr. Johnson is a perfectionist when it comes to those same details, so things have to be right.

Besides loving to start a work, Mr. Johnson also has a penchant for painting outdoors, an approach that gives him certain freedoms from the rigors of the studio. In fact, it's his very favorite aspect of the creative process, perhaps because he can be more spontaneous. But there are also challenges involved, like "capturing the subject matter before the light changes."

Mr. Johnson has been going to workshops in Rhode Island for several years now just so he can get an early jump working on-site. Asked about why he likes to work outdoors, he replies in a second, "In the studio, you have to recreate the experience. Working outdoors, it is the experience."

review: robert rosenblum at guild hall

When Helen Harrison of the Pollock-Krasner Foundation stepped up to the podium at Guild Hall on Saturday afternoon, her introduction to Robert Rosenblum went as follows: "Robert Rosenblum's singular and often controversial views on modern art are informed by his prodigious knowledge of European and American painting, from Ingres to Warhol and beyond. Recently honored by the International Association of Art Critics for lifetime achievements as an art historian, author and critic, he is a professor at New York University's Institute of Fine Arts and curator of 20th Century art at the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum. The most recent of his many books are monographs of painter John Currin and the performance artists Gilbert and George. Each year the Pollock-Krasner House and Study Center at Guild Hall co-sponsor a distinguished speaker who addresses an issue in contemporary culture. Mr. Rosenblum also holds the Chevalier de la Legion D'Honneur: Honorary PhD, Queens College and Honorary M.A., Oxford University."

In 1966, Robert Rosenblum was appointed professor of Fine Arts at New York University, where he still teaches today. The next year, in 1967, he published Transformations in Late Eighteenth Century Art. The book is considered his seminal work based on the idea of "turning points" of works of the early Modern period.

Always on the cutting edge, Mr. Rosenblum wrote a book that truly shocked the art world in 1989, entitled Paintings in the Musee d'Orsay; it was a revisionist view of 19th Century Art in which Mr. Rosenblum incorporates Cezanne, Manet and other mainstream avant-garde greats with previously disparaged academicians like Bouguereau, the purpose being to explain the larger picture, if you will.

In tackling the subject of Andy Warhol on this past warm and sunny Saturday afternoon, Mr. Rosenblum set the stage by informing his students that the lecture's basis actually began in 1939 when the dueling dualities of form versus content captured his imagination. He identified the expressionists of the 1950s like Rothko and de Kooning as "eternal, spiritual, and deified. They WERE truth. Whereas Andy Warhol was the polar opposite. You could say that Warhol was pollution, compared to the expressionists," said Mr. Rosenblum with a faint smile.

The subject of the discussion

Where Warhol was content, Rothko was form. If there was a defining moment, it was here, with the high art of Rothko, versus the low art of Warhol. Guiding us through the process of understanding various paintings, it was apparent that even in color, Rothko's works were subtle and transcendent, whereas Warhol's were garish, show business glitz.

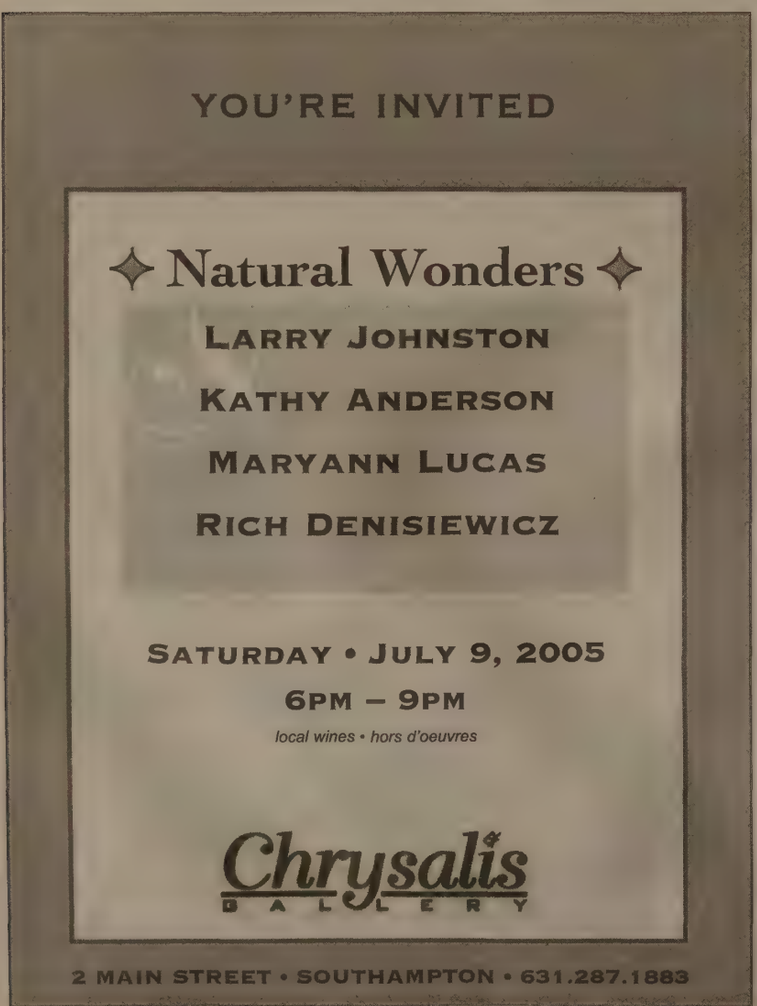

Initially, Warhol paid homage to the greats by allowing his early Campbell's Soup cans to have the occasional drip. But Warhol's content was lowly and earthbound, as demonstrated by his series of auto accidents in pastel colors, or photos of police beating demonstrators in a series of red, white and blue. Or then, there were his multiple electric chairs, alongside garish colored images of a dead movie star (Marilyn).

Mr. Rosenblum went on to explore the visual dualities present in the work of Jasper Johns (high art) versus Warhol (low art). In displaying Jasper Johns' paintings of The United States – diptychs if you will, one in color and the other in black and white, side by side with Warhol's diptych of Marilyn – there exists the identical color/anti-color polarity. The dilemma centers around color versus black and white. Mr. Rosenblum speculated that perhaps the dilemma stemmed from black and white film being eclipsed by color. Regardless, the argument seemed to permeate all of contemporary art, high or low.

Beginning in 1965, Warhol's color began to change. Warhol was using the same content, the Campbell's Soup can, as a vehicle for exploration; the image remained the same, but the color became far more subtle and elegant. Simultaneously, the shadow paintings of Roy Lichtenstein and Kenneth Nolan echoed the abstract paintings of Hans Hoffman and Willem de Kooning. Such homage is seen even in more recent contemporary painters such as Phillip Taffe (1988) as he pays his respects to the work of Clifford Still (1949).

The result of the duel between form and content was hardly resolved in the two hours spent comparing the images of the various greats, but rather now the duel has captured our imaginations as well and, for better or for worse, like Mr. Rosenblum, we will never be able to see art in the same way again.

Frisbee: The Ultimate Sport

On a gorgeous, sunny summer day, with a cool breeze blowing, everyone knows the best place to be is at the beach. When you're at the beach thinking of what to do next, other than reading Dan's Papers, try playing one of the summer sports that you are guaranteed to enjoy – Frisbee.

One of the best reasons for playing Frisbee at the beach is the fact that anyone can participate. Whether you are old, young, male or female, you can play Frisbee. And best of all, a Frisbee is the only item required to play. So, dust off that old Frisbee or go into a local store and pick one up. Frisbees are fairly inexpensive and range in cost from about ten to twenty dollars.

Frisbee is an awesome sport that can also keep you in shape. Playing Frisbee is a great form of exercise for the arms, legs, wrist, waist, and shoulders. Chasing the Frisbee all over the beach as it glides through the air is an excellent cardiovascular exercise. Whether playing in knee-deep water or simply on the sand, both are good forms of resistance for building leg muscles. As soon as you decide you want to stop burning those calories, cool down by taking a dip in the ocean.

If playing Frisbee has piqued your interest, you can choose from a variety of different types of games. The most frequently played games are Freestyle and Ultimate Frisbee. In Freestyle, or "Trick" Frisbee, players use tricks their friends have taught them or just make up their own unique styles as they are playing. If this game intrigues you, pick up a "Freestyle" Frisbee which weighs 160 grams. It's lightweight, glides longer and gives players more time to incorporate new ways of catching the elusive disc. This type of game is best played with friends and has no competitive nature. A game with a more competitive nature is Ultimate Frisbee.

Ultimate Frisbee is very well-known at the college level. This game involves two teams of seven players and is played with an "Ultimate" Frisbee, which weighs 175 grams. The object of the game is similar to football in that the team on offense scores a goal when a player on their team catches the Frisbee in the end zone. Although this sounds simple, it is actually quite a difficult feat since you just can't run with the Frisbee into the end zone. The players must pass it to one another and work their way up the field. To make this game even more difficult, the team on defense is trying to intercept the Frisbee or knock it down. Once either of those events occurs, there is a change of possession and the team on defense becomes the team on offense and then tries to score. The game can get very competitive but unlike football there is no contact allowed. Players are supposed to have fun while using their best sportsmanship skills. According to the collegiate rulebook, at least 15 goals must be scored for a game to be completed. Keep in mind that you are at the beach and you can improvise on the distance of the field, the duration of the game, and the number of people per team.

Two less frequently played Frisbee games are Double Disc Court (DDC) and Guts. Double Disc Court is played with two players on each team and two Frisbees being used at the same time. A team scores when their disc lands in the opponent's court or if the opponent drops a Frisbee that is thrown to them. If a disc is thrown outside of the opponent's court, the opponent gets a point. Two points are given if either team gains control of both Frisbees at once.

The other Frisbee game, Guts, is played by two teams ranging from one to five players. The teams start out 14 meters apart and throw a Frisbee to one of the opposing players. A player on the throwing team has to throw the Frisbee as hard as he/she can in order to make the receiving team drop the Frisbee. Points are scored for the throwing team when the receiving team drops the Frisbee. The receiving team scores points when the throwing team does not throw the disc in the area of the receiving team. The receiving team must catch the disc cleanly and in one hand. Standard play continues until a score of 21 points is achieved.

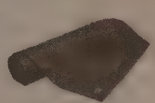

If these games are not of interest to you, don't worry, you can always play fetch with your dog.

Clippity Clop with Ali Spencer

Although my fellow equestrians may get up in arms about this analogy, let's pretend for a moment that buying a horse is like buying a car. Buying a car from a used car lot is risky. You have no idea of the history of the car – whether it's a lemon, or if it's been in a major accident – and it could cause you nothing but frustration and grief. However, if you purchase a brand new car, it's much more likely to be problem free. Similarly, if you buy a horse from a stranger, you really have no idea of the horse's background. It could have been mistreated, trained poorly, have a bad attitude towards people, or have soundness problems. Many times, it's quite difficult to really know what you're getting.

So, where should prospective horse buyers go to ensure they are getting a high quality, well-adjusted, well-trained animal? How about Montana? La Cense, an 88,000 acre ranch in Dillion, Montana, specializes in training quarter horses using natural horsemanship. There are probably few, if any, places like this in the country. The ranch's unique approach ensures that every horse sold is safe, confident, happy and trustful of humans.

A horse's journey to La Cense begins at the age of two, having lived the first two years in a natural herd environment with minimal contact with humans. They are selected based on conformation, physical soundness, disposition, strength, and beauty. Arriving at La Cense, they receive a small amount of introductory training and are then let out into pasture for a year.

The horse's formal training begins at age three. The trainers at La Cense do not "break" horses. They "start" horses. Throughout history, training methods have been based on the horse submitting, and this has been achieved through fear, pain and abuse. At La Cense, the goal is to have the horse willingly perform any task that his owner might ask of him, and he will respond to his owner because a level of mutual trust and respect has been developed. Furthermore, living on a huge ranch in Montana exposes a horse to many different elements and obstacles to overcome, such as rough and rocky terrain, streams, rivers and bridges. It is important to the trainers at La Cense that their horses be comfortable in any situation they face, whether it's being bathed, clipped, loaded into a trailer, or moving to a new home.

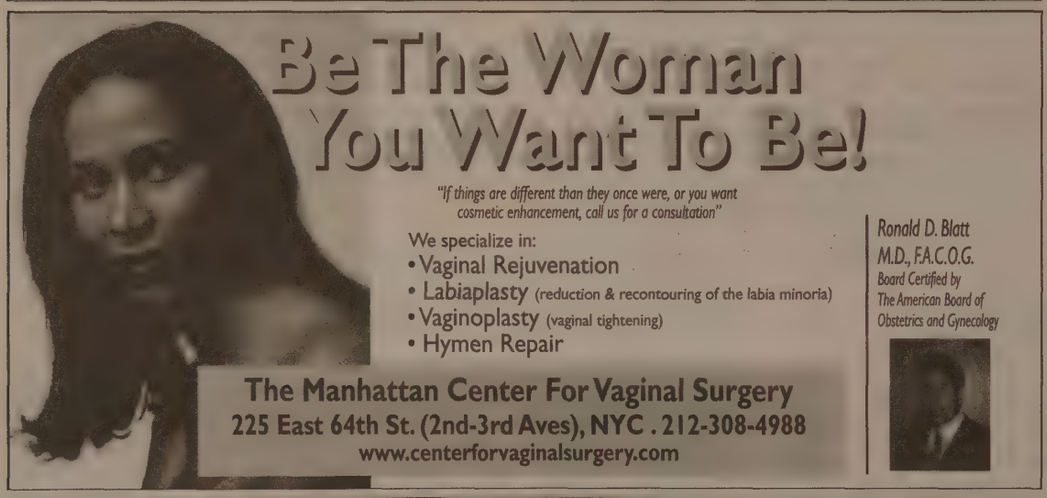

A few weeks ago I was lucky enough to experience La Cense and its training methods for myself, and I witnessed some incredible sights. I saw horses being ridden without a bridle or saddle and stopping on a dime when the rider relaxed. I saw horses without halters willingly follow their leaders around the arena, whether it was at a walk, trot or canter, or going backwards. In the arena at La Cense there was a large rubber ball, about three feet in diameter, rolling around to accustom the horses to strange and scary objects. The trainers at La Cense want the horses to be curious about new things and confident enough to approach and examine an intimidating object.

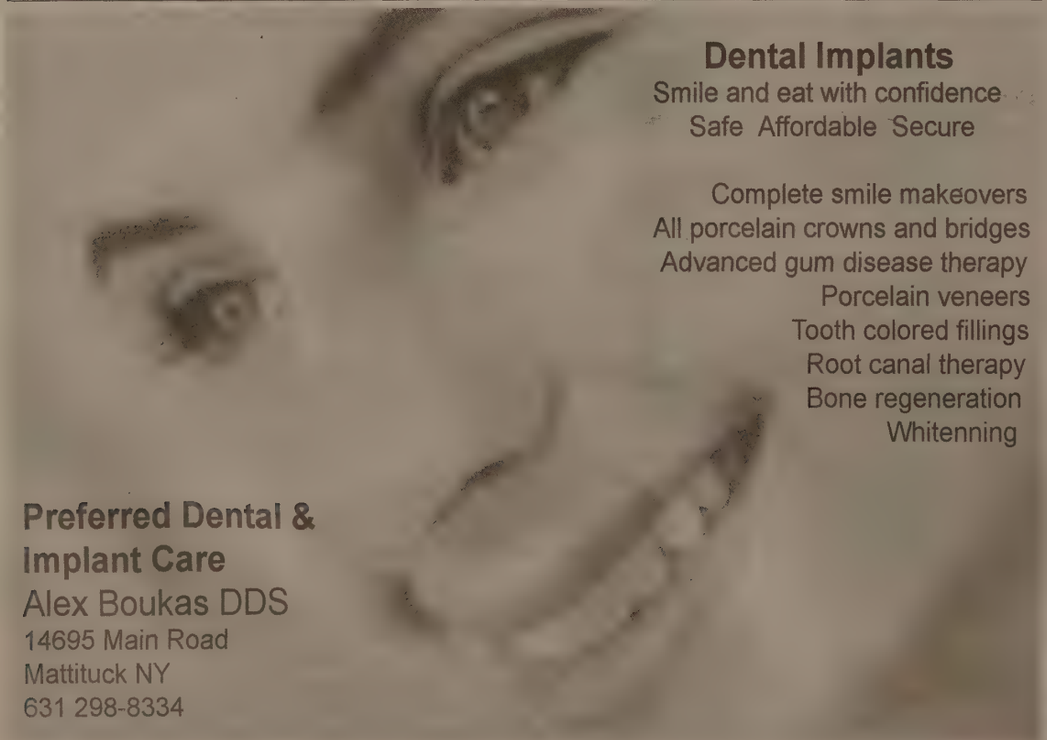

I was also fortunate enough to ride a La Cense trained horse named Olive. In my riding career I have ridden probably close to 100 horses, and Olive was light years ahead of any other horse I've had under me. I basically had to throw everything I knew about riding out the window. To get Olive to turn, all I had to do was very lightly close my leg. To get her to stop, I sat down in the saddle, relaxed my body, and thought about stopping. It was as if she read my mind. She was so sensitive, and so tuned into me, that the slightest shift in my weight or pressure on the reins would cause a reaction. I felt such trust in her that after only a few minutes on her back, I found myself galloping across an open field, confident that she wouldn't buck or spook, or throw me to the ground.

The moment that brought the whole La Cense experience together for me happened on my final day at the ranch. I was once again riding trusty Olive on a trail ride with a trainer named Danny. He was riding a horse who had been introduced to a bit in her mouth only two days prior and she was acting as if it were old news. We came to a bridge and his horse balked. Instead of hitting and kicking and forcing his horse over the bridge through fear and intimidation, Danny was very patient and rewarded his horse for every step forward and positive effort she made. After a few minutes we crossed the bridge, and not long thereafter came to another bridge, which the horse crossed like an old pro. As Danny explained to me, if his horse was physically forced to go over the bridge, she would learn to hate bridges and equate them with fear and pain. But by being patient and letting the horse solve the problem for herself, the bridge becomes just another part of the path.

Rejuvenations by Christina Poulos

Achieving and maintaining a dark tan is at the top of my friends' to-do list every summer. A typical weekend for them will consist of a night out, and then waking up fairly early to head to the beach. I'm usually the one that skips the outdoor activities during the hours that the sun is at its brightest, relying on my faithful sunless tanning foam to keep me bronzed. This past weekend, I took a risk and joined my friends for a beach outing, and am now paying for it severely, with my bright pink skin.

I hate to admit it, but I got burned. I fell asleep, woke up, my friends were in the water, and I was fried. Baking in the sun is something truly out of the ordinary for me, so when I woke up from what must have been a good hour on my back; my entire front was pink – or more like fuchsia. My friends assured me that I looked great, but as soon as I got home, I instantly regretted giving in to their summer religion of worshipping the sun.

By asking around and doing a little research, I found a few things that you can do to help you get through your first – and hopefully your last – sunburn.

Drink plenty of water, because baking your body in the sun can cause you to lose up to 5 pints of water per hour. As much as you feel you need to, don't shower right away. Stripping your body of the precious oils it still contains isn't a good idea, and soap will only further irritate your condition. If you have been in a chlorine pool, quickly rinse off with lukewarm water, not cold water, because it will tighten your skin.

Soak a few towels in vinegar, or apply vinegar with a spray bottle to the affected areas, as it's a cooling and effective way to treat your burn. Another skin solution is aloe vera, which can be bought at the store, or used straight from the plant. Take note that bottled aloe vera usually isn't effective for more than a year. Using it in its most natural state is best. Simply break off a spear and rub the cooling gel directly onto your skin. Aloe plants grow back rapidly and last for years, so I highly recommend them.

While paying for your day in the sun, you'll find a few more at-home remedies in your kitchen. Plain yogurt is said to soothe your skin and work miracles for a bad burn. Not only are eggs one of the best sources of protein, they also work wonders when you spread just the whites directly on to affected areas. Sugarless tea also has a cooling affect, and used, cool teabags are especially soothing over the eye area. Boiling lettuce in a cup of water, letting the water cool, and then applying to the burned areas with a cotton ball is a little labor intensive, but will also do the trick. For a full body fix, grab a cup or two of cornstarch and mix it with a tub filled with lukewarm water.

The most delicate skin is on your face, and is also one of the most sun-exposed parts of your body. That is why I headed to Local Beauty of Montauk, to indulge in their 30-minute Ultra-gentle soothing treatment. This facial felt heavenly, calming and comforting on my reddened skin. While I was there I also snuck a peek at their portable Sun FX Spray Tan booth, which can be transported right to the privacy of client's homes, and is ideal for parties. Their spray tan is quick, odorless, streak-less, and, most importantly, safe for your skin.

It is a scary fact, but pre-cancerous growths occur during the hours people fry themselves in the sun. Unsightly age spots will occur on the chest area, and fine (or not so fine) lines will eventually develop on the face. The sun will also age your hands, which along with your face are highly exposed parts of your body. Overall, your skin will lose elasticity, which will be most obvious after the age of 40.

Being sun burned as bad as I was is enough for me to want to head to the spa next time my friends choose the beach. To get bronzed in 5 minutes flat, enjoy a relaxing facial, or check out their new line of mineral makeup, head to Local Beauty in Montauk. Just call 631-668-5338, to book your appointment and get directions to their convenient location.

Glass with Class

Whether crystal clear or pigmented with color, glass is one of the most beautiful accents to a tabletop or a mantel piece. You can find pretty works of glass anywhere, from the shelves of Kmart to the walls of fine galleries, but there is something extraordinary about a hand-blown piece of glass, crafted by the expert motions of a glass blower. The art of glass is manifested in a wide range of pieces, from unique pendants to classic vases, from delicate ornaments to wide, sturdy bowls.

Glass blowing has ascended in popularity in the past few decades in the United States, though there is evidence that it originated centuries ago, as early as 50 BC. Some of the earliest blown glass discovered by archaeologists was in Palestine and Syria. Because of the vastness of the Roman Empire, this art quickly spread to Europe. There had been a time when mass production of glass was not available, and therefore, glass was only accessible in small amounts to the extremely wealthy. Glass blowers made this beautiful substance more readily available to the masses.

The art of glass blowing, according to blower Michelle Luetjen, requires liquefying the substance so that you can work with it. There are several different kinds of glass, including lampworking glass and soft glass. Soft glass is more often utilized for large items like vases, while lampworking is for smaller items like little jars. Pyrex glass is known to be a very durable type, and therefore it won't break as easily in the kiln or afterwards.

Basically, the blower creates a glass "straw" through which he/she exhales little breaths of air to shape the substance in its plasma-like state. The product is actually a part of this straw, and at the end of the blowing process, it is removed. The glass blower uses a tube or rod of clear glass as well as separate colored tubes of glass. The colors are then fused into the clear glass in the blowing process. The glass is shaped over a torch.

Glass blowing has the potential to be a dangerous process – "kickbacks" occur when the blower accidentally inhales when working. Every time the glass hits the flame, it fills with chemicals, which are toxic to inhale. Every blower has a story about when a kickback knocked them off their feet. The gases used in glass blowing are oxygen and propane. The more oxygen, the hotter the flame. The more propane, the bushier and lighter the flame. The hotter the flame, the faster the glass melts. The more advanced the blower, the faster they can manipulate and shape the glass, making their work more precise.

I remember sitting in a glass blower's studio as he shaped a pendant. His hands moved gently, as if he were caressing a baby's cheek. The liquefied glass took shape under the movement of his metal tool, lovingly called the "claw," and the soft pockets of air that he blew through the straw. From a rod of clear glass and a mosaic of colored glass, he shaped a cylindrical pendant that now rests on my collar bone.

Michelle said that the first time she worked with glass, it was "the most amazing feeling. It was working with both gravity and balance."

Many glass blowers start with an informal apprenticeship. They learn from a professional, just to make sure that they really like it. The materials needed to become a glass blower are expensive, so it's important to try it out before investing. With the increase in popularity and the recognition of glass blowers as artists, though, many universities have incorporated glass blowing into their Fine Arts departments.

Glass blowers need certain materials to begin working. A torch, which varies widely in terms of quality, is necessary. Very expensive torches can create a tiny flame that reaches extreme temperatures, which allows more precision in detailing. A kiln is the oven in which you fire finished pieces. A blower also needs a propane and oxygen tank for the gases. But what Michelle emphasized is most important are the safety glasses. The price jumps from about $40 to $400, and you should not cheap out, because working so closely with glass, fire, and gas is a dangerous craft.

People often underestimate the artistic significance of glass pieces since it is so easy to buy mass-produced imitations that look so similar. But glass blowers work tenderly with their art, putting attention and heart into each piece. Supporting local, caring artists by purchasing real, unique glass is an investment worth making.

Your Pad or Mine?

"Today, we have a huge job to do. We are going to clean the pond," said the land manager on the sprawling farm in Costa Rica, where I found myself employed for a brief time. Images flashed through my mind of myself covered in pond scum as I attempted to dredge the squishy stuff from the bottom. But we all pulled on rubber boots and walked across a few fields towards the pond. Suddenly, the land manager stopped. We all looked around, curious as to why we were pausing in the middle of a field. He lifted his long metal rake and cast its head as far as it could go. When he pulled the long wooden pole back towards him, a path of clear water emerged as if from behind a curtain. We realized that we stood not before a meadow, but a pond, entirely choked with a thick carpet of lily pads. And we were not commissioned to clean the bottom, but rather, the top.

Lily pads are, contrary to my prior beliefs, not plants on their own. They are actually just the leaves of the large water lily plants that grow in bodies of freshwater. They usually spring up near shallow shorelines and in tranquil inlets. Lily pads generally range from six to 15 inches in diameter, and the leaves are lighter green when young and darker green when mature. Lilies are plants that will fight hard for their survival and can be very invasive. Their leaves often overlap each other in a battle for sunlight. Therefore, we have to be vigilant to protect undergrowth when lily pads are growing in our ponds. Still, some coverage is great, as it offers shade in the hot summer months.

The submerged portions of lily pads offer habitats for many organisms like micro and macro invertebrates. These organisms are then eaten by larger animals, like ducks and fish. In the northeastern United States, lily pads offer a supplement to the diet of moose and beavers as well. But the animal we tend to associate most with the lily pad is the frog. Lily pads are perfect for amphibians, who live both in water and on land. They offer a "sundeck" of sorts for the frog when the time comes to hop out of the cool water and bask in the warm sun.

The water lily plant is composed of four parts. I realized this as I attempted to join the land manager in clearing the pond. I figured that the rake would just glide through the soft, floating lily pads. But when I flung my rake into the vast expanse of lily pads, they would not be smoothly swept away. They were clinging to the floor of the pond for dear life. The rhizomes are like roots, buried in the mud at the bottom of the pond. The stem is thick and cylindrical, and grows as long as the pond's depth demands. It connects the rhizomes with the pads, or leaves. The lily pad is the leaf, and is almost a perfect circle except for a notch on one side. The underside of a lily pad is usually a reddish-purple. The flower is naturally white with a yellowish center, though there are strains that are cultivated by humans to be different colors, like pink. White water lilies are perennials, returning every spring.

The flowers are so beautifully fragrant that they capture the attention of poets and writers like Henry David Thoreau, whose affinity for them inspired him to write: "But it chanced the other day that I scented a white water-lily, and a season I had waited for had arrived. It is the emblem of purity. It bursts up so pure and fair to the eye, and so sweet to the scent, as if to show us what purity and sweetness reside in, and can be extracted from, the slime and muck of earth."

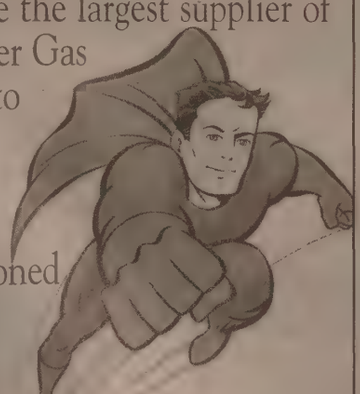

In spring, lily pads emerge from the plant's rhizomes. When they grow, they float on the water's surface. Eventually, buds appear, and by late spring, the buds open into fragrant white lily blossoms. Depending on what time of day you happen upon a lily pond, the blossoms may or may not be open. Lilies open wide in the day and close up in the evening. By fall, the flowers die, but the fruit of the plant then emerges. These fruits are green and similar to berries, and they contain many seeds, which scatter to spread more lily pads in the coming year.

Ponds dotted with white lilies are awe-inspiring; just ask Claude Monet. Because of the stillness of ponds, they give a great sense of serenity. Once we on the farm had cleared away enough of the growth to see the water beneath, we sat on the sunny banks and gazed out as the ducks swam around, in and out of the lily pads.

Orange is the Happiest Color

Frank Sinatra once said, "Orange is the happiest color." For a man known as "Old Blue Eyes," this seems to be an unusual statement. But he has a point. Considered by many color-psychology experts to be the color of bliss, orange is stimulating and energizing while at the same time representing harmony and warmth. It is the color of activity, boldness, exuberance and liveliness; it is cheerful, welcoming, fun and joyful. Intense like red but tempered by yellow's happiness, orange has been proven to have positive effects on the body and psyche alike.

Orange is associated with the second chakra, which is the energetic band around the lower abdomen. Also known as the spleen chakra, the intestines, spleen, gall bladder and sexual organs are all influenced by it. This chakra helps us to communicate with others and connect with our individual self. It speaks not to what society expects of us and wants us to become, but rather to who we actually are and become. A balanced second chakra helps a person to be insightful, intuitive, creative and passionate about values. The second chakra is heavily associated with feelings of guilt and shame. A blocked chakra can make a person feel guilty, but orange can help to release the negative feelings that prevent personal growth and well-being. When recovering from deceit, whether spiritual, emotional or sexual, orange can help to overcome the shock of it all. With too little orange in our lives, we can become shy and distrustful. We can become unable to show emotion and withdraw from social activity.

Using color therapy is an excellent way to communicate your desires through decorating. The only color that is also a flavor, orange is thought to awaken the appetite for action, adventure and even food. Its versatility makes it a perfect wall or accent color for nearly every room in the house. Orange is perfect for all seasons, evoking images of Halloween and the changing color of leaves in autumn and of citrus fruits and the heat of the sun in summer. In fall, it is a transitional color, and it can similarly serve in your house as a bridge between the seasons. It is a natural color choice for the kitchen, as the color of harvest and healthy foods. However, this is not the only reason to use it. Kitchens tend to become the social center of the household, and orange is known to increase sociability and encourage people to talk, making it an ideal color for a gathering space. Strategists are often drawn to orange, and so its presence in an office or study would be encouraging. It is also a good choice for entrepreneurs, as it encourages boldness, adventure and creativity. Additionally, the second chakra's association with sexuality makes orange a good color for the bedroom. Decorate with orange in your vacation home, and be reminded of the tropics all through the winter. Orange has high visibility, and using it on the best features of your home will help them to stand out and attract attention.

Color therapy expands beyond a can of paint, however. As a citrus color, orange often reminds us of Vitamin C and good health. It sounds psychological, but the impact orange has on health is not a figment of the imagination. It is useful for muscle spasms and cramps because of its anti-plasmic effect. It can help in treating conditions of the spleen, stomach and intestines. A respiratory stimulant, orange expands the lungs, and it can be used to revitalize the body after bouts of asthma, colds and bronchitis. Less intense shades of orange, such as peach, are especially effective in treating people with depression and other emotional conditions. A stiff lower back, confusion and lack of sexual desire are all symptoms of a blocked second chakra, and can all be treated by an infusion of orange into your life.

Orange can serve as pick-me-up in the wardrobe department as well. When feeling self-conscious, tired or depressed, wear something orange. An orange scarf, shirt or jacket will help balance your emotions and make you feel better. Wearing natural orange crystals and gemstones is another way to achieve the effect. Orange stones include carnelian, orange calcite, orange jade, agate, coral, amber and orange quartz. Place them at the pulse points, which are the ears, wrists, ankles and neckline, and you will feel free, passionate and creative. Sounds to me like orange is the new black.

The Itsy Bitsy . . . Husband Eater

Even though spiders have spawned their own phobia – Arachnophobia – and are some of the most despised and feared insects on Earth, they are actually also some of the most beautiful and beneficial to humans. In addition, they are instinctually architectural geniuses and engineering whizzes. Architects have been studying web geometry for years, and silk-producing genes have actually already patented!

Spider web design could be duplicated for a plethora of uses including bridge suspension cables, seat belts, and artificial tendons. The reason this silk is so desirable is that a strand thinner than a strand of hair is 5 times stronger than steel wire of the same width, and can stretch by over 30 percent without snapping. We have not found a way to duplicate the spider's genius yet. Perhaps that's part of the reason we fear them so much – they have power that we can't capture, even though we want it.

Spider's silk is a protein substance that balances strength and elasticity. This silk is squeezed out of "spinnerets" in liquid form, and when it touches the air, it solidifies. We have identified seven types of silk glands, and each one has a different purpose. One is used for wrapping up prey, another is used as the "swinging line producer," another for egg sacs, another for setting up the web, and another for producing the sticky traps that capture prey.

There are an estimated 600 species of spiders here on Long Island. In one wooded acre, there are over 2 million spiders, though many are too small to be seen. And those arachnids, toiling thanklessly for us humans, consume approximately 48,000 pounds of insects annually.

While we as a species have an irrational fear of spiders, there is one group who rightfully should hold on to its terror: the male spider. Many female spiders are much bigger than their male counterparts, and they will eat their mates for protein after getting what they wanted from them. The female orb weaver spiders are murderesses who invite the males up to their webs, mate with them, and then eat them for protein. Other male spiders manage to avoid the wrath of their females by bringing gifts, like flies wrapped up in silk. While the female is distracted by the tasty treat, the male will mate with her and then run for dear life, literally.

The wolf spider is a common species here on Long Island. Large and hairy, these spiders will definitely scare you out of the shower, but they are completely harmless. They hide in leaf litter in the winters and emerge when the temperature rises in spring. You will often find them tapping and waving their legs around.

Another spider you are likely to see around these parts is the Daddy Long Legs Spider, not to be confused with the Daddy Long Legs. The spider version of this insect has a separate head, thorax, and abdomen, while the Daddy Long Legs' whole body is fused. There is a myth that we've all heard about Daddy Long Legs Spiders, and upon much research, I have found conflicting views. It has been said that Daddy Long Legs Spiders are the most venomous creatures in the world, but their jaws are too weak to break through our skin. This always terrified me, because at the rate of adaptation, my great-great-great-grandchildren would be destined to be consumed by the "harmless" Daddy Long Legs Spider. Indisputably, though, they are masterful hunters, who lie in wait, completely still, before attacking their prey, which usually consists of other spiders.

Spiders are some of the most intriguing animals in the world, inspiring such "spin-offs" (haha) as the comic book Spiderman, the movie Arachnophobia, and the car the Alpha Romeo Spider. And who could ever forget our dear Charlotte? EB White's Charlotte's Web was the first book to ever make me cry, and when that selfless spider devoted her life to saving Wilbur, she broke down many of the barriers that stood between the arachnid kingdom and our own. So next time you run into a spider web, don't fight it. Even a Boeing 747 jet couldn't take on a strand of spider silk as thick as a pencil. So take a step back and allow yourself to be awe-struck. These silk spinning creatures have a lot to teach us (though hopefully not in terms of male/female relationships).

Made in the Shade

I love sunshine, don't get me wrong. There's nothing better to me than waking up on a sunny day and heading to the beach. But I must admit, sometimes the sun gets a little too strong; sometimes I can't handle the heat. These are the times when I look for some shade to cool me off. In summer, shade is a necessity. I remember working as a camp counselor at a park that had almost no shade. Keeping cool was difficult, and asking the kids to play games in the blazing sun was sometimes asking a little too much. Luckily, there are ways to create a shady slice of heaven in every setting – at the beach, by your pool, in your backyard.

The beach is one place where there is never shade. You need to bring it yourself. The easiest way to do this is with the classic beach umbrella. After a little time in the sun, you probably need a break, and you might think the water is a little on the chilly side, so a beach umbrella is a good investment. Keeping the cooler in its shadow is also a good idea. As you've probably noticed when strolling down the beach, there are many many different types of beach umbrellas. The beach umbrella is an easy way to show off your personality and shine in the sea of people at Sagg Main. If you are looking for vibrant colors to match the sun, try the Rio Beach Umbrella with Tilt – Bali Hai ($29.95). Six feet in diameter, this umbrella has SPF 100 to really protect you from the sun. One of its best features is the tilt, which allows you to easily adjust it as the sun moves across the sky. The Solartech Windbrella ($59.95) is one of the more high-tech beach umbrellas, even though that sounds a little bit like an oxymoron. This umbrella features its patented Windbrella

Vented Mesh System, which lets the wind pass through its upper and lower canopies, making it very sturdy in the wind. The Windbrella's color reflects most of the sun's rays and keeps you up to 15 degrees cooler. Another great choice for a beach umbrella is the Shaped Umbrella ($39.95), which is available in the shape of a palm leaf, daisy, sunflower and tropical flower. All of these umbrellas are available at www.beachstore.com.

While beach umbrellas are the natural choice for beach shade, there are other ways to create it seaside. Try the Beach Hut ($79.95) for a true shady shelter. The structure is basically a beach umbrella with side panels, so while the umbrella provides protection from the sun, the panels provide a little privacy, for those times when you just want to get away and read a book. The Beach Hut is also available at www.beachstore.com. Another alternative is the Portable Beach Shelter ($29.97). This structure is portable and easy to set up, and also has an SPF of 50. Especially convenient are the inside and outside pockets, good for storing beach treasures, books and sunscreen. You can find it at www.patioumbrellas.com.

When it comes to your pool, one of the most logical places for shade is at the table. A great patio umbrella will make summer drinks even more refreshing. For a really unique look, try the Tiki Umbrella ($489.87). It's a little on the pricey side, but worth it. It is 7 1/2 feet in diameter and made with authentic palm thatch. With the illusion of palm trees overhead and the water at your feet, you will really feel as if you are in an island paradise. The Tiki Umbrella is available at www.patioumbrellas.com. If you would rather have a more classic look, try the Bordered Market Umbrella from Pottery Barn (potterybarn.com). It's made of a durable canvas that is strong enough to withstand all the elements. Nine feet in diameter, it is a stone color with a border in either blue or red. This umbrella is currently on sale for $69.

Sometimes it is nice to escape to a quiet little getaway, and it is especially nice if that getaway can be in your backyard. If you are not in a rush, then consider planting some trees. But if you are ready to sit in shady seclusion now, you'll need to try something else. Consider the 12 x 12 Sport Shade Canopy ($169.99 at www.elitedeals.com). Perfectly portable, you can use it as a permanent structure or only when you need it, perhaps during a party. It is also a good investment if you spend a lot of time sitting on the sidelines at soccer tournaments.

The Garden At Rock Cottage

by Lance Brilliantine

A Flower for All Seasons

Over the years, there have been tremendous advancements in one of America's favorite plants: the begonia. Far from the mundane bedding begonias often seen at nurseries and garden centers, some types of begonias provide an almost endless assortment of beautiful, large flowers and leaves that are suitable for flowerbeds, hanging baskets, container specimens, and houseplants. They grow comfortably in both shade and partial sun.

. I am particularly fond of tuberous begonias with their large, vivid flowers and multiple configurations. Yet, those grown for their colorful leaves and smaller or non-existent flowers are equally beautiful. When given care (you must devote time to pruning and deadheading), the plants can provide years of enjoyment for their leaves or continuous blooms.

All begonias are part of the Begoniaceae family of plants. The plants originated from tropical and subtropical climates. Brazil is considered one of the more important origins for begonias. There are generally two distinct types: Semperflorens and Tuberous. There is a third, perennial type of begonia that is considered of lesser importance.

Semperflorens begonias are the most commonly seen. This type includes those classified as fibrous, waxy, and ever blooming. They are typically grown as annuals in the northeast. (These are easily found in nurseries and floral shops and include the bedding begonias. We do not recommend starting semperflorens begonias from seed, as this is time consuming.) Among this type, flowers vary in sizes and colors in shades of red, white, yellow, salmon, and pink – but are typically small. On many, the flowers are somewhat less important than the beautiful waxy leaves that come in shades of green, bronze, and chocolate. Flowers on these types of begonias all have a bright yellow center, and grow compact, dense foliage to about one foot tall.

The tuberous begonias are also grown as annuals. These plants emerge from a central, concave tuber that can be planted just below the surface of soil. As they grow, these begonias produce handsome, beautifully colored leaves and large, gorgeous flowers in a variety of petal shapes. Some of the tuberous begonias may be upright, others pendulous and hanging. The tuberous begonias include those that produce large, variegated leaves. One variety, the painted-leaf begonia, produces heart-shaped leaves up to 12 inches in length and about six inches wide. The leaves show striking patterns and colors of red, black, silver, and green. Tuberous begonias may attain heights of up to about 14 inches and may be as wide as 18 inches.

Regardless of type, begonias like rich, loose, fertile soil with very good drainage. I have found a soil mixture that combines peat moss, vermiculite, and compost is ideal. The semperflorens begonias like to be drenched with water and then dried out. Tuberous begonias prefer to be kept slightly moist at all times. However, you must keep from over watering either type; this is the main danger with begonias, and the primary cause of stem rot. In fact, it is best to water the plants from beneath the soil if at all possible. An occasional dousing with a light, fish emulsion fertilizer every four-to-six weeks helps to produce vigorous plants and vivid flowering/colors.

All begonias require collaborative attention to do well. Dead flowers, leaves, and elongating stems need to be removed. For appearance's sake, pinch off extra or too-long stems as the plants develop. Keep only the strongest stems. Large-flowered begonias look best with fewer, large flowers – so pinching off early developing flowers is also helpful. As stems grow longer, they should be trimmed to help retain the plant's compact shape. This collaborative type of care helps the plants thrive, and guarantees continuing blooms and lush foliage.

Once fall comes, begonias can be transitioned to indoors. Bring plants indoors just before the first frost and place in a well- ventilated room near a window where they will receive at least six hours of light a day. Hold back a little on the water at first and prune back the stems to invigorate new growth. As the plants adjust to the new conditions, they will send up new leaves and flowers for a wonderful winter display. Many plants brought indoors will last through the winter to provide garden color in the following year.

Begonias are a great plant for experimentation. They are not expensive, and respond very well to some care. If watered cautiously, this is a plant that guarantees success.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

On the East End in summer it is all about the beach, and realtors here obviously know that. Last week the holiday and beautiful weather drew masses onto the long stretch of Hamptons beaches. For the most part, everyone has secured their summer rental or has settled in their new summer home for the season by the Fourth of July. The activity coming into the real estate offices begins to slow down. Realtors, however, have to look at the bigger picture and know that they must find inventive ways to draw in buyers or future summer renters from the beach. The East End realtors understand it. Most of them are on the beach themselves (cell phone in hand, of course). So if the buyers won't come to them, they will go to the buyers. Why not have a banner stream from a small plane along the shoreline where thousands of people will see it? That is just what the Corcoran Group did as onlookers were already dreaming of a beach house in the Hamptons or possibly upgrading to that bigger, more impressive home or maybe just getting closer to the water. The banner read, "Where do you want to live?" I would guess many people on that beautiful 80 degree sunny day accompanied by the perfect summer breeze coming off a sparkling ocean, said, "Right here."

Many realtors find creative ways to draw attention to their listings. Prudential on the North Fork has had open house beach parties at waterfront listings that have even included live music. Norma Reynolds Realty in Westhampton has her entire staff dress entirely in summer white, and promotional shots are always taken on the beach. Why not? We are in the Hamptons after all. Tina Fredericks of Tina Fredericks Realty, once dubbed "realtor to the stars," has always donned a straw hat. It is her nickname, as a matter of fact. I know realtors that sell waterfront condos in shorts while serving cold drinks and hors d'oeuvres. It works. It's like when the car salesman hands you the keys to a convertible and says, take it for a few hours.

The East End real estate world is a competitive one. More and more brokerages are expanding further and further east each year. Many of the larger firms now reach as far as Montauk. And, although properties may be listed with one agency or the other, when a deal is to be made, it is anyone's listing, particularly if the numbers are high enough. This is why multiple listing service never really appealed to East End brokers, because it is well known in an unspoken way that whatever comes on the market is really anyone's listing. Money talks, after all.

If you are looking for a beach house, there is one hidden on Shelter Island that may be the "one." It is a three-bedroom, three-bath, shingle style beach cottage on over two acres that also includes guest quarters, a gunite pool and a two-car garage. It rests on the tip of a peninsula that juts out into Coecles Harbor. There are views from every room. There is almost 500 feet of white sand shoreline as well as a deep-water dock. The most outstanding feature of this property is that it is set deep inside a 40-acre preserve which makes it not only completely secluded, but pristine. It seems more like a distant natural paradise than a part of Long Island. The realtor, M. Wein Realty of Shelter Island, warns prospects that in one visit to the waterside patio, sunroom and pool, they may fall in love. And it is understandably so.

On a less grand scale you can still pick up a small beach cottage in the Amagansett dunes for a little over a million, believe it or not. This one has a private ocean beach just a 100 yards away, has two bedrooms and one bath, a fireplace, a patio and Jacuzzi. It is listed with Village Realty Group at $1,050,000.

TRUE FACTS OF REAL ESTATE

by Karen True
Vice President
Corcoran Group, Palm Beach, FL

NO TAX FOR YOU!

How would you like to sell your property and not pay any capital gains tax on the profit? Sounds like a shady deal, but the IRS created a procedure for you to do just that. It's called a "1031 Tax-Deferred Exchange," and many people have never heard of it. But even small investors with just one property can take advantage of its benefits.

In the most basic of terms, a 1031 exchange allows investors to defer their capital gains tax if they exchange for or purchase another "like kind" property within a certain amount of time. The provision for "like kind" real estate is pretty broad, allowing for the exchange of land, rentals, or business properties as investments or rentals.

The lackluster performance of the stock market in recent times has inspired interest in real estate as an asset, so more investors and realty professionals are learning about these 1031s. Taking proceeds from your sale and putting them into something like bonds hits you with taxes that put a big dent in your returns. Putting your money into another property as your investment defers the tax burden.

Of course, any real estate agent assisting with the transaction would also be working with tax advisors, attorneys and intermediaries to guarantee that all the nuances of the tax code are fully complied with, and that you are completely satisfied with your exchange.

If you are thinking about purchasing a property in Palm Beach, use the best! With over 20 years of real estate experience, my personalized service and attention to detail guarantees that you will find the property that precisely fits your needs. My passion is Palm Beach, let me make it yours. Call me today: 561.371.0002.

POTATO PRIDE
Dear Dan,

I am still wearing the Potatohampton T-shirt I acquired in 1983 when I won the race in my age category, fifty and older. I have wonderful memories of that and subsequent events that took place around Memorial Day every year. The last Potatohampton race I ran in my age category and won an elaborate trophy was in 1987. I have lived in San Diego, California since 1988 and have run several races but none that can equal the fun and the pride and the marvelous trophies of the Potatohampton races that will always be my pride and joy.

Thank you, Dan, for making me a competitive runner in my middle age, and now a slow but steady morning runner in my old and still healthy age.

Sincerely.
Lila Rockstein formerly Lila Steinberg

NEVER TOO OLD
Dear Dan,

I enjoyed reading the article about the "Lola" fashion show that was held at the Star Room. If only all of us were young and attractive enough to participate in such events! I've been a resident of the Hamptons my entire life, and have never attended a single night club but apparently it's quiet the rage out here with all the young and restless and was wondering whether or not there are guidelines for such things. Twenty-one is the youngest you can be, but is there a maximum age, and if so who decides how old is too old? It would be truly horrifying if after all these years I built the courage to wander into one of these social scenes and was denied entrance.

Best of Luck.
Robert Langley

How could they deny you entrance? This is America! – DR

BARE TRUTH
Dear Dan,

Many years ago (1975) you ran an article and photo of me streaking at Southampton College. I was the editor of the College Year book, and photo editor of the Windmill, trying to create a story on streaking, but no one did it on campus, so I did it and wrote the story and started the trend on campus....

Now, I discovered that the Shinnecocks want to turn the college into a gambling casino, and look at the photos I took in 1975... (This is way before photoshop)...who knew?

WATCH IT GO
Dear Dan,

Do you know who owns the Watch tower in Sag Harbor. I heard a rumor they were going to knock it down. That would be just terrible.

Thank you for your time. Hopefully this historic building can be saved.

Steven Loffman
Via e-mail

It's owned by Malloy Enterprises – DR

HOW HIGH?
Dear Dan,

I read about the possible sale of a house in The Hamptons for $90 million. In the article you, Mr. Rattiner, were quoted. The gist of what you said implied that this is very exciting time for homeowners and "everyone wants to know how much higher it will go." This says to me that so many of us are filled with greed. If this continues, it will definitely be the demise of the American Dream (owning your own home). I do realize that the rich are different from the rest of us but it's scary to think that it's quite possible in our lifetime to see the middle class destroyed. Am I the only person in this country that is exceptionally concerned? I certainly hope not.

Debra Matchett
Mechanicsville, MD
Via e-mail

I only meant the RICH want to know how much higher it will go. The rich get richer. – DR

GOLF IS GOOD
Dear Dan,

It was good to see the "Hampton Style" crew out in force at Ann's ACS Charity Event. The engagement of a "community for a cause" that Ann Liguori engineers each year is a model of proactive private altruism that should be publicized. The mix of support is quite eclectic in that they represent corporate, celebrity and individual donors from all different sectors from the Four Corners of the US. The gender-neutrality of Golf and the level playing field effect of handicapping make it a powerful magnet to draw across the board representation.

Police Blotter

Sleeping Around

An employee of Whitmore's in East Hampton was fit to be tied when he realized someone had been sleeping in one of the company storage sheds. The anonymous bed hopping social butterfly did not pay rent for his stay at the luxurious tool shed, so Whitmore's notified local authorities.

What a Relief

A Bronx man visiting Montauk was disturbed when he walked into a crowded bathroom at Nick's restaurant on South Emerson Place and saw someone urinating in the garbage can. Appalled by the action, he demanded the urinator control himself. The peeer became very emotionally charged when the man asked him to stop, and once finished, he proceeded to attack the etiquette aware citizen. Police arrived shortly after, but the assailant had already vanished.

Face Off

Nothing's worse then looking into an empty refrigerator when you've got the midnight munchies. The site of sour milk and soggy salad sent a Riverhead man off the deep-end, and he tried quenching his hunger pains by eating a chunk of an innocent woman's face. After realizing Dr. Hannibal Lector was on to something, the man stole a case of beer from his victim and left on foot. Southampton Village Police arrested him on Pine Street minutes later and charged him with assault in the third degree and criminal possession of stolen property in the fifth degree.

Wasted Away Again in Margaritaville

That frozen concoction that helps us hang on landed a 22 year-old Sag Harbor girl in jail. An employee of La Superica was forced to call the police for assistance when the woman became unruly and bothersome to customers. When the cops arrived and tried escorting her out of the building, she became violent and slapped an officer in the back of the head. Her visit to Margaritaville ended at Suffolk County Jail in Riverside when she failed to post the $500 bail set by the presiding judge.

Share Cropping

In an effort to perfect a Water Mill resident's prized entrance, an unidentified landscape aficionado trimmed a large section of the front hedges. The owner considered this a malicious attack on his beautiful home and reported the incident to police who noted that about ten feet of hedges had been chopped off. No one has claimed responsibility for the gardening, but the owners of the house have stated that they will not pay a single dollar if the mystery helper decides to send them a bill.

Seeing Eye to Eye

It's always unpleasant waking up with bags under your eyes and not having any moisturizer. A woman was so anxious to apply $45 worth of daily revitalizing eye cream to her face that she couldn't even wait to pay for it at Second Nature Market on Newton Lane. A surveillance camera caught the cream craving lady on tape, but police have yet to make an arrest.

You Got Served

A bartender from Amagansett working at the Blue Parrot in East Hampton was shocked when an undercover police officer informed him he had just served a 17 year-old alcohol without asking for identification. He was given a $200 appearance ticket.

STOP FOR TURTLES From late spring through the fall, our indigenous turtles roam their now fragmented environment. As they wander out onto the roadways, they are often struck by speeding and unexpecting motorists. These precious turtles are slow moving and can be easily avoided. When frightened, they withdraw into their shells and resemble an ellipitical stone in the road. Please drive with care and help a turtle cross the road.

SONARGUARD®

POOL SECURITY SYSTEM

SonarGuard® creates an invisible "sonar-net" below the surface of the water. When a child falls, slips or slides into the pool, the "sonar-net" is broken and immediately triggers a distinct sounding alarm.

SonarGuard® is the only pool alarm product for new and existing swimming pools that...

- Works 24/7
- Works in any pool size or shape
- Is fully automated
- Is professionally installed and maintained

Custom Pool Safety is the Northeast Distributor of the SonarGuard Pool Security System.
